LEARNING FOREIGN AND SECOND LANGUAGES

Perspectives in Research and Scholarship

Heidi Byrnes, ed.

Learning Foreign and Second Languages provides an overview of second language acquisition research. Is language a system of linguistic forms to be acquired by the study of grammar, or is language a means of communication, where students learn not by studying rules but by engaging straightaway in the use of language to convey meanings? Which approach is better in the classroom? The vibrant field of second language acquisition research is now carefully examining questions like these.

Written for a nonspecialized audience—for readers who share an interest in foreign language teaching and learning—this volume addresses both theory and methodology. The twelve essays discuss recent changes in the foreign language profession, the context of language learning and teaching in higher education, the sociohistorical perspectives on language teaching, the relation between linguistic theories and second language acquisition research, the role of computers in language teaching, the evaluation of learning outcomes, and the pedagogical implications of the research.

Learning Foreign and Second Languages makes second language acquisition research and scholarship accessible; suggests ways to resolve the competing demands for accuracy, fluency, and complexity in language use; and represents an important step toward overcoming the separation between language teaching and literature teaching. Administrators, department chairs, curriculum and materials developers, teachers, and graduate students will find this collection of essays enlightening.

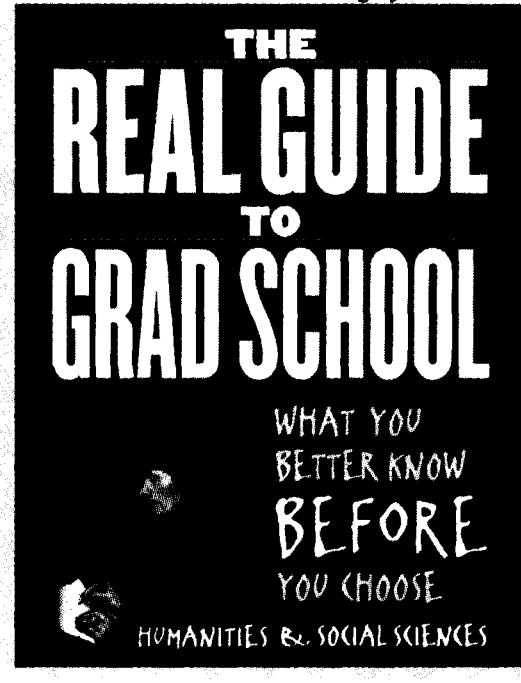
THE REAL GUIDE

FOR YOUR STUDENTS CONSIDERING GRADUATE STUDY, THERE'S NO BETTER PLACE FOR THEM TO BEGIN THEIR RESEARCH THAN THE REAL GUIDE.

FROM THE EDITORS OF Linguafranca



THE REAL GUIDE is the ultimate insider's map for anyone considering graduate school. Dealing with both the intellectual issues and the practical choices, it's as if savvy professors, a university library, and a job market hot-line were all present to advise and guide the prospective student. For your students considering grad school, this is the one book they can't afford not to read.

Based on hundreds of interviews with professors, graduate students, and administrators, THE REAL GUIDE covers:

TIPS on getting in and paying for grad school.

THE LOW-DOWN on Ph.D. programs in the twenty-three major disciplines of the humanities and social sciences.

VITAL ANALYSIS of departments and specialties: everything about what to study, where to go (and why), how the departments rank, and what to expect in grad school.

A WINDOW on the academic profession and the state of the current academic job market: discipline by discipline.

CONTACTS & RESOURCES for associations, rankings, journals, web sites, and areas of specialty by school—for each discipline.

JOBTRACKS from Lingua Franca's exclusive database showing who got hired and where they trained.

"It's about time we had a guide book written by somebody who really knows the culture of graduate school from the inside. Who better than Lingua Franca? I'll definitely be recommending THE REAL GUIDE to my students."
GERALD GRAFF, Pullman Professor of English and Education, University of Chicago

"Immensely helpful. I wish I had such a guide when I started thinking about grad school."

THE SCHOOL OF CRITICISM & THEORY at Cornell University

An international program of study with leading figures in critical theory invites you to apply for its Twenty-third Summer Session

June 14-July 23, 1999

IN NEW YORK STATE'S FINGER LAKES REGION

"The program sets up levels of expectations of what it takes to be a top-flight academic and scholar, not only in the United States, but internationally."

Elaine Yee Lin Ho,
Lecturer
University of Hong Kong

"For me, the SCT was a moment of crystallization. The animated interchanges with some of the finest minds in literary theory were an intellectual feast."

Jack Abecassis,
Chair, French,
Pomona College

The Program
In an intense six-week course of study, participants from around the world, in the disciplines of literature, history, and related social sciences, explore recent developments in literary and humanistic studies.

Tuition
The fee for the session is $2350. Applicants are eligible to compete for a small number of partial tuition scholarships, and are urged to seek matching funds from their home institutions.

Acceptance
Applications from faculty members and advanced graduate students at universities worldwide will be judged beginning March 1, 1999. Admissions are announced on a rolling basis, with the final roster complete by the end of April.

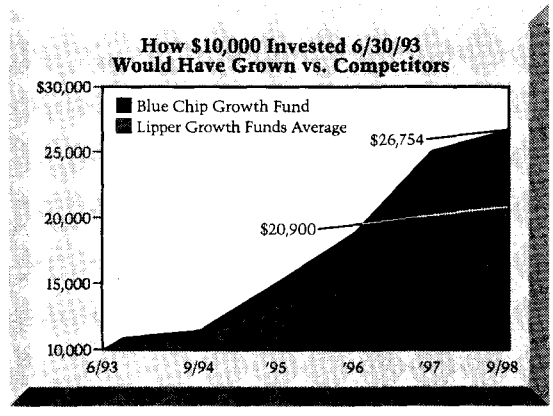
ARE YOUR RETIREMENT INVESTMENTS WORKING AS HARD AS YOU ARE?

Make the most of your 403(b). Our free kit shows you how.

One of the many benefits that may come with working for a not-for-profit organization is having the opportunity to invest in a 403(b) plan. As you plan for your future, every cent counts. Even a small improvement in your average annual return today can significantly increase your retirement income tomorrow.

It's easy to transfer. We offer more than 50 100% no-load mutual funds—with no custodial fee. And we offer the service and information you need to invest with confidence every day—for retirement or for other goals. Our free kit provides step-by-step instructions that make it easy for you to transfer your account balance, even if your plan doesn't offer T. Rowe Price funds.



6.39%, 19.61%, and 20.61% are the fund's average annual returns for the 1-year, 5-year, and since inception (6/30/93) periods, respectively, as of 9/30/98.*

Compare performance. How do your current retirement investments compare with one of our proven performers, the Equity Income Fund? This fund seeks substantial income and long-term capital appreciation by investing in stocks of established companies paying above-average dividends. The fund may be appropriate for retirement investors interested in protecting their purchasing power and cushioning their assets against volatility through dividend income. Of course, past performance cannot guarantee future results.

Act now. Since 1937, T. Rowe Price has been helping retirement investors meet their financial goals. Today, along with our affiliates, we manage over $125 billion in assets for more than six million individual and institutional accounts and offer our investors a broad range of investment options and services.

HARD SELL

One wonders what agendas motivated the responses to the ads we created for our client, Indiana University's College of Arts & Sciences ["Breaking Away," Field Notes, November]. "Appalling," one respondent writes; "wicked," "scary," "particularly tasteless, even by the low standards of the day." Did we touch a nerve?

The relevant question, it seems to us, is: Will this campaign help stem the decline in liberal arts enrollment? Lingua Franca rightly observes that the jury is still out. Can one speculate? Of course. But the angry digressions that some critics took are so thoroughly beside the point that it slanders the word to call them "academic."

Roger Kimball alleges that, like P.T. Barnum, our "intent [is] to sell the maximum number of people a bill of goods"—meaning, we presume, the notion either that a liberal arts education can lead to an intellectually rewarding career or that a student might find such an education "cool" (in the pejorative sense that several other critics implied). Mr. Kimball frets that "at stake is...the dignity and integrity of liberal-arts programs." Excuse us, but we think that when enrollment drops 20 percent, what's at stake is the future of liberal arts.

These are ads, folks, and yes, their aim is to sell. However, as creators of advertising, we are constantly reminded that our target audience is neither mindless nor, unlike a college's, captive. We know that they see and evaluate, and also reject, an enormous number of conflicting messages daily. We want them to notice, and to think about, the idea that a liberal arts education may not be the career trap so many perceive it to be. We would like to see more college students "think for a living." We are surprised by the professors and authors and deans of humanities who seem to find that such a threat.

PAUL KNAPP, PRESIDENT
YOUNG & LARAMORE
INDIANAPOLIS, IN

The introduction to "Breaking Away" begins, "When ABC slipped in the national ratings, the TV network launched a massive advertising campaign."

After ABC launched this campaign—which won them awards—their ratings plummeted. But they can blame cable. Who will Indiana blame if their Arts & Sciences enrollment doesn't pick up? Their ad agency! Unless, of course, they win awards. But it doesn't sound like any will be forthcoming—at least not from Adweek.

WILLIAM STERNBERG
NEW YORK, NY

A university doing badly hires an ad agency doing well to urge young people to hire the university to make them "think for a living" (Uunlike the rest of us, I guess, who are brain-dead). This former copywriter and nonacademic (no diplomas among the dust bunnies under my desk) laughed and laughed at the Weltanschauung (German spelling still okay?) this all represents. Guffaws being rare in November, many thanks.

C. PARENS

SENIOR MOMENT?

Jim Holt's uncritical citation of George Bernard Shaw's sneering remark about people who desire "personal immortality" in "Death Wish" [Hypotheses, November] confirms my belief that to admit you wish to stave off death forever is to violate society's last taboo.

I'll admit it. I wish I could live forever. And I'm hardly unique in this; otherwise, why would religions promising eternal life have so many adherents? Since I don't believe in an afterlife, I figure I'm limited to this one, so if immortality ever becomes a scientific possibility, I'll jump at the chance. But as a future old person, I already feel at odds with the social climate, which encourages disparagement of those who want to live too long.

"Insane self-conceit"? To whom does that really apply? Old people with so much zest for living that they wish they could live forever, or young people who try to make the old feel guilty for not wanting to step aside and leave the world to them?

FELICIA ACKERMAN
PROFESSOR OF PHILOSOPHY
BROWN UNIVERSITY

LOVING LICHENS

Lichens! Yeasts! Amanita muscaria! Laura Secor's coverage of George Hudler's book in "Fungus Among Us" [Inside Publishing, November] sent me to my shelves in a vain search for my old paperback copy of Lucy Kavaler's Mushrooms, Molds, and Miracles, which dates back to 1965. It was nowhere to be found, and I like to think that some efficient fungus has at last reduced it, in Mr. Hudler's words, "to an amorphous mass of organic rubble."

BARBARA BONN
NEW YORK, NY

Laura Secor prominently quotes Princeton University Press editor Jack Repcheck as saying: "There are no other trade books on fungus." Permit me to call your attention and that of Mr. Repcheck to my book, In the Company of Mushrooms (Harvard, 1997). In addition, there are other trade books on fungi, some of which you will find listed in the bibliography section of my book.

WAYS OF SEEING

To Adam Shatz's generally first-rate discussion of the relation between my personal life and my artwork ["Black Like Me," November], I would offer just one revision. Shatz says, "By administering a kind of racial shock treatment in her art, Piper tries to force viewers to reflect on what happens—and who gets hurt—when they fail to be as discriminating about people as they are about art.... THESIS THERAPY

"FOR YEARS," I SAID, "I WOULD start each morning thinking, 'I am never going to finish my dissertation.'"

"I imagine the process was difficult."

"It was. I'd energize myself with dread, move the cursor around, and call it a day."

Dr. Charles Ducey has a bright, antique-appointed corner office at Harvard's Bureau of Study Counsel on Linden Street in Harvard Square. He's a clinical psychologist and the bureau's director; and, for a negotiable fee, he'll conduct one-on-one sessions with Ph.D. candidates, mixing regular therapy with the kind needed by students writing dissertations—an urgent test of identity, which he compares to Jacob's wrestling with the angel. "People select dissertation topics that are close to their hearts," he says. "These topics tend to hurt a lot."

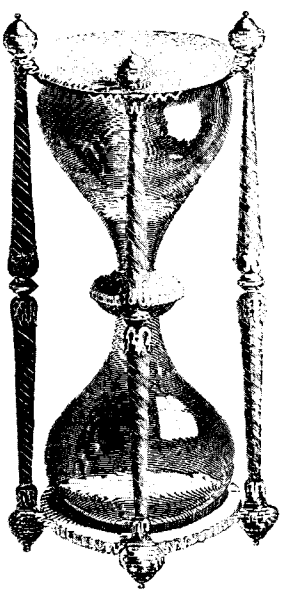
More than three thousand students come through the bureau yearly, seeking everything from study tips to serious psychotherapy. Of those, only about twenty come for dissertation therapy, although Dr. Ducey maintains that many more ABDs are stumped and unhappy but for various reasons refuse to get therapy. "Anxiety about a dissertation topic often manifests itself in avoidance," he notes.

In the delicate process of ministering to anxious graduate students, Dr. Ducey tries to avoid choosing sides between the dissertation and its writer. But he does have a stake in academic life. "We set out to treat a student insofar as she has chosen an academic path. But all unhappy dissertation writers are unhappy in their own way. If someone is trying to shore up a failing marriage, it might make sense to put her dissertation on the back burner." In the long run, he recommends finishing—for psychological as well as for professional reasons. "When you're done, you've mastered something, you've gotten free of it, and it becomes part of you," he says.

I had learned about Dr. Ducey from the graduate school newsletter; dissertation therapy appeared alongside announcements of muffin parties and screenings of Ghostbusters. The bulletin came at an auspicious time: After seven years as a graduate student, I had just been trying to find a new place for my stacks of maroon library books on the Gilded Age, many of them checked out to me more than five hundred days ago. When I was honest with myself, I was finding it harder and harder to evince an interest in any of them, much less in my thesis. But most unsettling of all, my inertia wasn't bothering me anymore. Instead, I dreamily imagined the pleasure of yielding to it.

"Let's back up," said Dr. Ducey. "How did you feel when you started graduate school?"

"Incredibly enthusiastic. I really thought I could pursue the dark and dramatic life of the mind, like Wittgenstein did. I subscribed to Common Knowledge and even liked talking about Stanley Fish at Au Bon Pain. In my first year, I heard a cautionary tale about a manic-depressive in my department who'd been there thirty-seven years—a G-37. I was determined to get the degree quickly. But in year two, things went downhill."



"All unhappy dissertation writers are unhappy in their own way."

"You say 'downhill'...."

"Everything seemed...fractured. The faculty seemed like warlocks, with mysterious code words and allegiances. There was a lot of tension among the students. Our most central beliefs seemed to be vulnerable in every conversation, even conversations about Anita Hill or Basic Instinct."

From my soft, high-backed chair, I could see the plain, hard back of Widener Library. It was almost a pleasure to tell the Dreiser-like tale of my academic unmaking. I told Dr. Ducey about my year off, working in New York, how relieved and happy I'd been. "But you came back," he said sharply.

"Yes."

Dr. Ducey made a note on his yellow pad. "You had decided against an academic career," he said. "Why did you come back?"

"I irrationally felt I had to. I was very irrational about it."

"How was it?"

"OK. I actually liked teaching. After a year and a half, I took my orals, settled on a topic. I decided to write on prosperity and turn-of-the-century American novels." "Do you use Frank Norris and Edith Wharton?" "Yes." "Upton Sinclair?" "No." "Hm."

Before long, my fifty minutes were up.

Several days passed, and I kept feeling better. For the past few years, I had been living in New York with an "open file" at Harvard—library privileges, a mailbox, and little else. I had forfeited colleagues, conferences, health care, students, and the graduate student lounge. It seemed that by leaving the university, with its grants, squabbles, and colloquia, I had doomed my dissertation to the status of a weird hobby. Perhaps it was time to let the old dream go!

PRODUCED BY UNZ.ORG

As I walked to Dr. Ducey's office for my second session, passing packs of undergraduates in sweaters and leather jackets, my mind was made up.

"Your second year was traumatizing," Dr. Ducey began.

"Yes. Absolutely not healthy for me. I think I had just maybe made a mistake in the first place. I'm not very well suited to scholarly, solitary library life."

"No?" He made a note.

"Well, I feel much better since last session. I think I just wanted to talk to someone about my transition out of the academy. My dissertation has been the center of my life, and now I want to call it quits. I think this ridiculous 'mystique' of academia just had me prisoner. I wanted to know..."

"Mystique?" "Yes, as if academic work were somehow more serious or noble than other kinds of work. When of course it's not."

Dr. Ducey glanced outside. "I wrote a dissertation," he said slowly. "I wrote a dissertation here, in fact. I wrote it fast and out of terror. I was terrified that I wouldn't be able to support my family if I didn't finish."

"Did you think there was a mystique?"

"That's a very hard question," he said, seemingly wanting to take it on. "Last session, you mentioned magazines. You mentioned Wittgenstein. Let me try to say it this way. Tina Brown is a brilliant businesswoman. People talk about what she did for The New Yorker. She turned it around, energizing an old magazine that had lost its intensity by adding color and the work of Richard Avedon. She has invigorated an American institution and people talk about her. But students for years and decades and maybe even centuries to come will cite Wittgenstein. Will they cite Brown? All people want to make a contribution to human knowledge, as Wittgenstein did. Add something. Potentially change everything."

For a full minute, we fidgeted and did not speak, in a kind of reverence that was both a joke and real.

We agreed that I would call in a month and keep him posted. Dr. Ducey offered some ideas for making a realistic schedule, working better with my adviser, completing just five pages a month. He told me to read some Upton Sinclair and to keep him involved in the process.

I walked out into the cold morning, picked up a coffee at Au Bon Pain. If I returned my library books, I might continue to feel happy, springy, more content. But, just as when I was twenty-one, feeling good seemed a small and mortal goal. In the window of the health center, a photograph of an emeritus professor in my department was being used to advertise geriatric aerobics. The years as an aging graduate student stretched ahead—G-10, G-20, G-30—my dissertation pages stacking up or failing to stack, the whole project refusing to close, like parallel lines. I am never going to finish my dissertation, I thought. Like the bells on the campus chapel, the words had a comforting, familiar ring.

HATE RADIO

ON PAPER, FERDINAND NAHIMANA would seem an exemplary intellectual. Born in Rwanda in 1950, at a time when Hutu like him were virtually banned from attending school, Nahimana quickly became a model for his country's historically oppressed majority. He studied at Laval University in Quebec; he taught at the National University of Rwanda; he received a doctoral degree in history from the University of Paris VII; and he wrote numerous well-regarded books and articles about precolonial Rwanda.

But according to the United Nations' International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, the young professor was the mastermind behind a propaganda campaign that in 1994 helped turn Rwanda into a nation of killers. Today, he is awaiting trial in a Tanzanian prison cell on charges ranging from conspiracy to commit genocide to crimes against humanity.

In his scholarly work, Nahimana set out to debunk mainstream European historiography, which claimed that Rwanda's precolonial regional kings had belonged exclusively to the Tutsi caste.

> Nahimana called on Hutu to "annihilate these Machiavellian plans of the enemy cockroaches."

Rwanda's Belgian rulers had used such beliefs to justify giving political power and preferential treatment to the Tutsi, whom they also believed to be racially superior to the shorter, darker Hutu. But Nahimana's writings, beginning with his dissertation, Le Blanc est arrivé, le roi est parti (published as a book in 1987), demonstrated the existence of a long line of northern Hutu sovereigns. The work was solidly researched and has been frequently cited. It also provided an intellectual foundation for the Hutu-led governments that rose to power in 1959, as well as for Hutu-extremist calls for an ethnically pure nation—a cause Nahimana supported. Indeed, in 1973, Nahimana had himself cofounded an organization seeking to exclude Tutsi from the country's university system.

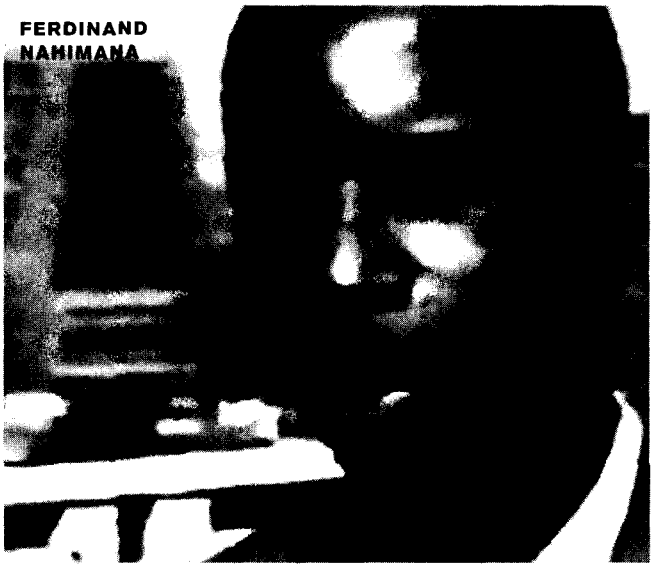
When Nahimana returned from France in 1989, he found his country in turmoil. The Rwandan Patriotic Front, a rebel army of Tutsi refugees based in Uganda, was threatening the government of Hutu president Juvenal Habyarimana, and ethnic tensions ran high. As a professor of history at the Ruhengeri campus of the National University of Rwanda, Nahimana struggled to make himself visible to the ruling elite and soon won the friendship of the president's favorite son. In 1990 Nahimana was awarded the leadership of the Rwandan Office of Information (ORINFOR), which censored all the country's papers and ran Radio Rwanda, the country's only radio station at the time.

Under Nahimana's guidance, Rwanda's press increasingly reflected Rwanda's most extreme Hutu elements. On March 3, 1992, at Nahimana's behest, Radio Rwanda repeatedly read a bogus secret memorandum from a nonexistent Nairobi-based group called the Inter-African Commission for Non-Violence. In the spirit of brotherly love, the fax warned Rwandans that the Tutsi army was hatching a conspiracy to kill a long list of prominent



FERDINAND NAHIMANA

Hutu, and that to achieve this end it was calling on a legion of "accomplices" among the Rwandan Tutsi population. The next day, Nahimana followed up with his own communiqué calling on all Hutu to protect themselves and "annihilate these Machiavellian plans of the enemy Cockroaches." (Cockroaches, or Inyenzi, is a pejorative name given to the Tutsi.)

On the following two nights, the region of Bugesera went up in flames. Before the anti-Tutsi violence was done, 277 were killed and fifteen thousand displaced—a foretaste of the genocide that was still two years away. A few days later, a group of five human-rights associations published a statement declaring the massacre "a logical and direct response to the mysterious communiqué which had been broadcast several times [on Radio Rwanda]."

Under intense international pressure, Nahimana was fired from ORINFOR, essentially for doing the president's bidding too well. At the same time, however, Nahimana had shown his usefulness to the Hutu government and had highlighted the potentially devastating power of radio in a country where approximately 60 percent of the population was totally illiterate but where virtually everyone was within earshot of a radio, the ultimate voice of authority. Greg Gordon, the UN prosecutor originally assigned to the Nahimana case, says: "The Bugesera massacre was a blueprint for what would come later. Nahimana had demonstrated what he could do given a radio station where he could work with impunity."

Creating a new propaganda vehicle was Nahimana's next mission. Given his effectiveness at the head of Radio Rwanda, "Le Prof" had no problem convincing the president and hard-line Hutu associated with his family to invest their own money in Rwanda's first independent radio station: RTLM. The list of the station's contributors reads like a Who's Who of Rwanda's genocidal bureaucracy. Indeed, according to a Belgian Senate investigation, in August 1993, just a month after RTLM came on the air, one of the station's leading contributors went about purchasing every machete in Kigali and had another twenty-five tons worth imported into the country. Hidden in caches throughout the countryside, these machetes would be distributed to militias and the general population when the time came to exterminate the Tutsi.

As the informal commissioner of RTLM, Nahimana was responsible for winning ordinary citizens over to the philosophy of Hutu Power, and that meant creating a radio station that could convince as well as entertain. Departing from the dry format of Radio Rwanda, RTLM's format gained huge popularity among Hutu and Tutsi alike with its lively mix of Zairean music, man-on-the-street interviews, and spirited political debates. In a soccer-crazed country, Nahimana also managed a huge coup in recruiting Kantano Habimana, Rwanda's most popular and funniest sports announcer. Listeners were reportedly brought to tears by Kantano's long extemporaneous riffs about the Tutsi penchant for milk drinking, an effeminate trait he traced back to their historical role as cowherds. The broadcasts would soon escalate far beyond ethnic name-calling.

On the night of April 6,

1994, the plane of President Habyarimana was shot down in its final approach into Kigali airport. Within minutes of the crash, RTLM reported this as the work of the Tutsi rebels, though some now believe that the perpetrators were extremists in the president's own government who felt their leader had become too moderate. The fire was not yet out when militia and government troops swept through Kigali, killing suspected rebel sympathizers, both Hutu and Tutsi. And throughout the night, the announcers of RTLM reported and cheered the news of yet another dead "accomplice."

In the hundred days that followed, when 800,000 Tutsi around the country would be hacked apart with machetes and bludgeoned with masus, RTLM grew ever more excited about the orgy of blood. Gaspard Gahigi, RTLM's editor in chief, ridiculed listeners for complaining about the primitive weaponry being distributed to them. ("Is a cockroach stronger than a buffalo or lion? I think traditional weapons will do fine.")

Announcers encouraged the population to join the militias at the roadblocks and help them with their "work"—that is, with the massacring of Tutsi. And to keep everyone entertained, the DJs played music and told jokes.

But from the first terrifying hours that followed the president's assassination, Nahimana thought it best to stay out of sight, first seeking refuge in the French embassy, then leaving the country altogether. Whether he feared for his own life or thought his reputation could be saved by bowing out before the genocide began in earnest, no one but Nahimana knows for sure. Until Cameroonian authorities served his international arrest warrant in March 1996, Nahimana lived in that country, supported by many of the same people who had funded his radio station.

Despite hundreds of hours of taped RTLM broadcasts and witnesses' testimony about the broadcasts' effectiveness in inciting the population to genocide, the UN's case against Nahimana won't be easy: Proving a causal link between propaganda and genocide never is. "It's going to be the prosecution's longest, most difficult case," says Stéphanie Maupas, editor of Ubutabera, an on-line magazine that is tracking the progress of the UN's International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (www./calva-comfr/intermedia). "Nahimana was a slippery character. He was definitely one of the key figures, but he never ran a militia or swung a machete in his life."

THE AUTUMN OF THE PATRIARCH

THERE ARE COMEBACKS IN this world, and then there are comebacks. It was less than two years ago that the New York State Board of Regents chased Peter Diamandopoulos from the presidency of Adelphi University, charging that he had grossly mismanaged the school while treating himself to lavish pay and perks. But on December 4, shortly after Adelphi accepted $4 million to settle its claims against him, Diamandopoulos resurfaced in academia. The deposed president had been hired as a special assistant to Boston University president Jon Westling.

"The man is a disgrace," protested the BU student paper, The Daily Free Press. "He should not be representing BU on any level. Get rid of him."

But, in some sense, the Diamandopoulos hire is perfectly representative of BU. It's simply the most dramatic of a series of eyebrow-raising events, major and minor, that have happened since the school's controversial president John Silber left office. Taken together, the incidents suggest that the Silber era is not over. It has merely entered its late decadent phase.

It's been two and a half years now since the hot-tempered, autocratic, and in many ways quite successful Silber stepped down—or up—from his quarter-century rule as the school's president to assume the newly created office of chancellor. After a bit of a lull, during which his headline-making activities were largely confined to his work as chairman of the Massachusetts Board of Education, the ex-president's influence has been "more obviously manifest in recent months," says Boston Globe columnist Alex Beam, who has broken the news of many of the latest dustups.

There was, for starters, the decision to abort a job offer to Jack Miles, a former editor at the Los Angeles Times and author of the Pulitzer Prize–winning God: A Biography. According to Beam's account, a deal was essentially in place to offer Miles an appointment to the theology faculty, until the esteemed literary scholar Christopher Ricks—apparently irked by an Op-Ed piece Miles had written for the Globe in favor of forgiving Bill Clinton—stepped in and used his influence with Silber to "put the shiv to Miles." Theology school dean Robert Neville declines to discuss the matter. But it makes one wonder: When Silber informed BU trustees in 1993 that the school had "remained resistant to" to such left-wing ideologies as radical feminism, multiculturalism, and the Frankfurt School, did he mean to include Clintonism as well?

BU appears more hospitable to the right-hand end of the ideological spectrum. At a November seminar on democracy, the historian Claudio Veliz reportedly shocked participants with a toast: He asked the gathering to drink to the news that Chile's ex-dictator Augusto Pinochet had won a round in his court battle against extradition from the U.K. "The assembled dignitaries, including Supreme Court justice Stephen Breyer, sat in stunned, stony silence," Beam recounted in his Globe column.

> "New York's gain is Boston's loss," says one regent.

But it's the Diamandopoulos hiring that has raised the most eyebrows. After all, Silber himself was not untarnished by the Adelphi scandal: He was the leading defender of Diamandopoulos on the school's board of trustees, one of the eighteen members (out of nineteen) who were fired by the New York State Board of Regents for intransigence and negligence in early 1997. The hiring of Diamandopoulos could be seen as a defiant response to that humiliation—or as an act of loyalty to an old friend. After all, Diamandopoulos and Silber have been close for years; indeed, it was Silber who helped convince his onetime protégé to accept the job at Adelphi in the first place.

For Diamandopoulos, the job at BU represents something of a homecoming: For years, he taught philosophy at Brandeis University in nearby Waltham, where he was known as a colorful and flamboyant figure. At BU, Diamandopoulos will have a vague portfolio overseeing development, education policy, and the school's highly profitable forays into international education.

What went wrong at Adelphi was an "unorthodox and unhealthy" leadership style, says Saul B. Cohen, the New York regents' chair for higher education—"a leadership style," he adds, "which was clearly borrowed from and supported by the then president of Boston University."

And now Silber, who once shared a $546 dinner with Diamandopoulos at Adelphi's expense, is bringing the scandal home to BU. "New York's gain is Boston's loss," Cohen says.

The BU administration takes a different view of the hiring. "We hire people for their abilities," university spokesperson David Lampe says of Diamandopoulos. "There are very controversial people in academia."

TOM SCOCCA

AFTER THE CRISIS

IN 1940 A PRECOCIOUS YOUNG man with an interest in the theater joined a YMCA amateur drama group in Harlem. Harold Cruse, aged twenty-four, was instantly struck by one "highly curious" fact: "All the members were overwhelmingly in favor of doing white plays with Negro casts. I wondered why, and very naively expressed my sentiments about it." What he subsequently discovered about culture and politics in Harlem formed the core of his monumental survey, The Crisis of the Negro Intellectual, published to energetic critical response in 1967. "It will eventually come to be regarded as one of the landmarks of social criticism in the twentieth century," gushed Christopher Lasch. The historian Eugene Genovese proclaimed, "In focus and depth it transcends anything written in our generation." Critic Albert Murray judged it "the most urgently needed if not the most important book of the year." Others were less approving. "I don't think too much of it," remarked the Trinidadian writer C.L.R. James. "He doesn't like West Indians, he doesn't like Jews, he doesn't like too many people."

Despite these early portents, Cruse's book fell into a long slumber of obscurity. The Crisis of the Negro Intellectual has remained in print—no small achievement—but occupies a precarious place in the canon of history and African-American studies. Yet the book's thirtieth anniversary has finally ushered in a modest Cruse revival: A conference on his work was recently held at the University of Michigan; Nobel laureate Wole Soyinka honored him at a gathering at Ohio State University; NYU's Tamiment Institute Library has acquired his papers; and a collection of essays assessing his legacy is forthcoming from Routledge.

Cruse's six-hundred-page book is a caustic, polemical, and uncompromising indictment of Harlem's black bourgeoisie and intellectual elite for its integrationist philosophy and its historic failure to develop a sophisticated program of "cultural, political and economic advancement" along nationalist lines. Negro intellectuals, contended Cruse, "analyze nothing and clarify less and heap confusion on top of confusion" and, unlike their Jewish, Irish, and Italian counterparts, "did not teach the Negro masses the techniques of ethnic group survival under capitalism." The results were catastrophic: a "cultural scorched earth policy" joined with political backwardness, poverty, and economic slavery. For Cruse, responsibility for this state of affairs ultimately rests with the black elite. "What is really lacking," he wrote, "are Negro intellectuals who are economic theorists, or who are social theorists about anything but racial integration."

Cruse used razor-sharp vignettes of figures like Paul Robeson, Richard Wright and Lorraine Hansberry to demonstrate how, from the 1920s to the 1950s, black intellectuals were led astray by the integrationist politics of the American Communist Party and its often Jewish leaders. This "brainwashing," argued Cruse, blocked the emergence of any kind of serious black politics. The ideological dominance of the Negro left also obstructed the growth of black enterprise: "In Harlem radical circles after the war," Cruse contended, "anyone studying the contents of The Wall Street Journal or The Journal of Commerce was looked upon with deep distrust."

Cruse directed his further scorn at the black bourgeoisie's inability to provide patronage for its own artistic talent. "From 1910–1930, there was infinitely more theatrical activity in Harlem than occurred between 1945 and 1960," he asserted. "All Negroes in the theater are paying for the precarious integration of a few." By the 1960s, Cruse believed that black nationalists had swung to the opposite extreme, adopting a "hatred of whiteness" that was "self-defeating" in its disregard for "the critical faculties."

In its obsession with the old left (Cruse was a member of the Communist Party from 1946 to 1953), its interdisciplinary sweep, and its occasional bluster, The Crisis of the Negro Intellectual is very much a document of its time. It's the work of a man who came of political age in the 1940s after serving in World War II, a man who honed his polemical skills on Harlem street corners and in Greenwich Village haunts like Café Figaro, a man who toiled at Macy's and the U.S. Post Office by day and passed his nights reading and writing in the solitude of a Chelsea apartment. Cruse was a man who believed, as he wrote in The Crisis of the Negro Intellectual, that in order "to get down to the roots of this racial crisis in America...all intellectual superficiality...coming from either side of the racial fence, must be shattered with the most rigorous critical assault the collective intelligence can muster."

HAROLD CRUSE

"In Harlem radical circles," wrote Cruse, "anyone studying The Wall Street Journal was looked upon with deep distrust."

Today, the book's blueprint for an uplifting, middle-class-led nationalist project—a black political party, the formation of business and housing cooperatives, massive federal aid—is decidedly unfashionable, as is the text's recurring theme: "No social movement of a protest nature in Harlem can be successful...unless it is at one and the same time a political, economic and cultural movement." Yet Cruse's fundamental arguments are still debated in different contexts, as the playwright August Wilson's recent call for an autonomous black theater demonstrates.

Scholars examining the book's importance from the vantage point of the late 1990s differ about its legacy and significance. At the OSU conference, Beverly Guy-Sheftall of Spelman College assailed the "masculinist paradigm" of the book, which she said led to a skewed and misleading depiction of the only woman featured in the text, Lorraine Hansberry. OSU's Ike Newsum wistfully implied that the political climate in the 1990s makes it difficult even to discuss the book: "It's not so much about nationalism or integration or communism anymore," said Newsum. "It's about careerism versus radical intellectual activism. Maybe that's the question now."

Columbia's Manning Marable, who considers The Crisis of the Negro Intellectual to be the "most complex theoretical work produced in the Black Power period," nevertheless criticizes its focus on ethnicity as an immutable category in American life and its emphasis on New York City as a bellwether for black America. Marable notes, too, that the black bourgeoisie dissected by Cruse has, in the wake of the civil rights movement, been superseded by one that is much more demographically and politically complex.

Others have no doubt about its lasting importance. "The greatest value of his book," wrote the late John Henrik Clarke in 1991, "is that it is the work of an alarmist. Alarmists have a role to play in history.... Mr. Cruse has put many subjects on the agenda for black intellectuals to handle that cannot and should not be ignored if we are to survive as a people." Says Cornel West: "Every time I write I'm wrestling with Cruse."

In the wake of the book's initial success, Cruse won fame as well as fortune and found himself in demand. The University of Michigan tried to hire him in 1968, but, reluctant to leave New York, he declined the invitation. But when Michigan came back with a lucrative offer of $18,500 per year, he accepted a post in the Department of History, taking it up without so much as an undergraduate degree, much less a doctorate. He retired in 1984, and in 1987 published a subsequent work, Plural but Equal, in which he reiterated his call for a black political party and black economic cooperatives.

From his home in Ann Arbor, the eighty-two-year-old Cruse is now completing a sequel to The Crisis of the Negro Intellectual in which he assesses intellectuals like Cornel West and Henry Louis Gates Jr. and nationalists like Louis Farrakhan. He is tight-lipped about the manuscript but quick to defend his earlier work. "The black bourgeoisie in America is a lumpen bourgeoisie," Cruse scolds. "It's a middle class that has not lived up to its class mission."

WE ASKED EIGHT EXPERTS TO SPOTLIGHT THE BEST RECENT BOOKS ON AMERICAN CINEMA

Jon Lewis, professor of English at Oregon State University and editor of The New American Cinema (Duke, 1998).

"Hollywood history, Norman Mailer contends, is composed mostly of factoids; stories are taken as true not because they are factual but because they have been so often repeated. The thirty-five interviews in Patrick McGilligan and Paul Buhle's anthology, Tender Comrades: A Backstory of the Hollywood Blacklist (St. Martins, 1997), provide just such a selective and seductive history. The interviews (with the likes of Lionel Stander, Abraham Polonsky, and Ring Lardner Jr.) attend to careers lost to time. History, they remind us, consists of stories told by survivors. Thomas Schatz's Boom and Bust: The American Cinema in the 1940s (Scribner's, 1997) covers much of the same turf, albeit in the third person, and does so with a keen eye for the 'remarkable ironies' that characterized the complex relationship between Washington, D.C., and Hollywood during and after the war."

Judith Mayne, professor of French and women's studies at Ohio State University and author of Directed by Dorothy Arzner (Indiana, 1995).

"B. Ruby Rich's Chick Flicks: Theories and Memories of the Feminist Film Movement (Duke, 1998) offers a unique take on the development of feminist film culture in the United States. Rich has been an important contributor to debates about feminist independent cinema, and this collection of essays traces her development, as well as that of many filmmakers and critics, over the last two decades. Rich introduces each piece with an autobiographical sketch that underscores the passion and fervor animating early feminist film criticism. Equally rewarding is Patricia White's Uninvited: Classical Hollywood Cinema and Lesbian Representability (Indiana, forthcoming). White argues that lesbianism has never been quite as absent from classical Hollywood cinema as most critics have assumed. After reading White's book, Bette Davis's famous lines to Paul Henreid in Now, Voyager—'Oh Jerry, don't let's ask for the moon! We have the stars!'—will never again sound quite the same."

Ben Singer, professor of film studies at Smith College and author of Melodrama and Modernity: Early Cinema and the Social Contexts of Sensationalism (Columbia, forthcoming).

"When film historians discuss the rise of avant-garde cinema, they tend to focus exclusively on a small canon of 1920s European filmmakers indebted to Cubism, surrealism, Dada, and futurism. Only in the late 1940s and 1950s, they claim, did a bona fide American avant-garde cinema coalesce, spearheaded by Maya Deren, Stan Brakhage, and other filmmakers working in poetic and abstract expressionist modes. The thirteen contributors to Lovers of Cinema: The First American Film Avant-Garde, 1919–1945 (Wisconsin, 1995), edited by Jan-Christopher Horak, prove this thesis wrong. The collection's essays and extensive filmography establish the importance of early avant-garde film practice in America—one inspired by, but in certain respects distinct from, European modernism. What emerges is a portrait of a highly eclectic film subculture made up, on the one hand, of artists, writers, and sophisticated amateurs and, on the other, of Hollywood employees who commandeered studio equipment for experimental side projects and tried to introduce avant-garde elements into Hollywood productions."

"In recent years, books on film noir have been almost as numerous as the mugs packing .45s who populate those brooding postwar films. But much of that scholarship, because it frequently employs psychoanalytic readings, takes up gender issues, or focuses on the same handful of films, has been doggedly routine. example of the genre—James Naremore's More Than Night: Film Noir in Its Contexts (California, 1998) is a welcome investigation. Examining noir's many historical contexts, Naremore considers often overlooked influences, such as French Popular Front films and American literary modernism. Fresh material on the Hays Office and the marketing of films casts new light on classics like Gun Crazy and Detour, and chapters on recent and international films demonstrate that smart-talking double-crossers still retain their appeal."

Lauren Rabinovitz, professor of American studies and film studies at the University of Iowa and author of For the Love of Pleasure: Women, Movies, and Culture in Turn-of-the-Century Chicago (Rutgers, 1998).

"Thomas Waugh's Hard to Imagine: Gay Male Eroticism in Photography and Film From Their Beginnings to Stonewall (Columbia, 1996) sets a new standard for the history of gay cinema in America. Waugh meticulously documents and analyzes an array of nineteenth- and twentieth-century still and moving images—disparately understood as pornography, art, science, or popular culture—for how they represent male bodies and what they contribute to the history of gay male self-expression. He tracks the production of homoerotic porn movies over the last century, revealing how publicly repressed films rarely deemed worthy of serious scholarly attention are crucial for understanding the dynamics of film culture. And he links the history of underground gay porn to the ways that gay subcultures have appropriated mainstream icons such as bodybuilding imagery and the scientific studies of the Kinsey Institute."

Justin Wyatt, associate professor of media studies at CUNY Queens College and author of High Concept: Movies and Marketing in Hollywood (Texas, 1994).

"Aesthetically and economically, American cinema is neither entirely studio-driven nor solely beholden to the domestic market. A frank and unapologetic insider perspective on the rise of independent films is offered by Christine Vachon and David Edelstein in Shooting to Kill (Avon Books, 1998). Vachon, the producer of breakthrough successes such as Todd Haynes's Poison, chronicles in fascinating detail the development, financing, budgeting, production, distribution, and marketing of independent film. Hollywood & Europe: Economics, Culture, National Identity, 1945–95 (BFI, 1998), edited by Geoffrey Nowell-Smith and Steven Ricci, offers an equally compelling analysis of Hollywood product in the global market. One of its many insights: The box-office grosses tracked by the infotainment press are hardly accurate measures of economic success. The Last Action Hero, for instance, bombed in the United States but—like most star-driven action films—was a big hit in Europe and Asia, thereby allowing Sony to recoup the film's extravagant production costs."

Annette Kuhn, reader in the Institute for Cultural Research at Lancaster University in England and editor of Queen of the Bs: Ida Lupino Behind the Camera (Praeger, 1995).

"Janet Staiger's Bad Women: Regulating Sexuality in Early American Cinema (Minnesota, 1995) is an impeccably researched and gracefully written study of early-twentieth-century 'bad women' films such as Traffic in Souls, A Fool There Was, and The Cheat. Staiger addresses the part played by these films in debates about public morality ('social hygiene') and eugenics ('race suicide') during the 1910s. She treads a careful path between two film-historical fallacies—on the one hand, that films simply reflect social and historical reality, and, on the other, that the formal organization and content of films are fully understandable in isolation from their economic and social contexts. Bad Women is emblematic of the 'revisionist' film history informed by concerns about women—both as the subjects of films and as a large part of cinema's audience."

Stephen Prince, professor of communications studies at Virginia Tech and author of Savage Cinema: Sam Peckinpah and the Rise of Ultraviolent Movies (Texas, 1998).

"Histories of film must attend not only to the medium's intimate connection to its sociopolitical moment, but also to its multiple identities as technology, art, business, and industry. While the earliest film histories tended to traffic in anecdote and myth, contemporary film histories have a solid empirical base and draw from primary source documents and industry records. An ambitious, ten-volume work, Scribner's History of the American Cinema is the most thorough treatment yet published of the first one hundred years of American cinema. Under the general editorship of Charles Harpole, the series has put out six volumes so far. Proceeding decade by decade, the series uses primary documentation to trace the development of the film industry, from storefront nickelodeons to the Hollywood studio system, and from there to the breakup of the studios and to the industry's present place within the global communications marketplace."

MAKEOVER

A MIXED REPUTATION PLAGUES PMLA, THE 115-year-old flagship journal of the Modern Language Association (MLA): prestigious but deadly dull. While assistant professors dog-ear their copies of Critical Inquiry and Representations, PMLA tends to pile up on bookshelves for future reference. And though heavyweight scholars gild PMLA's editorial board, few disciplinary stars actually submit articles to the journal. Filling its pages instead are dense papers by midtier scholars and even graduate students.

Such may be the ineluctable fate of any general-interest humanities journal in a hyperspecialized world. Once the bible for graduate students, it's now just one of hundreds of alternatives in a crowded scholarly market.

Despite the MLA's reputation as an elephantine bureaucracy, Martha Banta, professor emerita at UCLA and PMLA's editor since 1997, is determined to energize the journal—the goal, she declared a year ago, being to keep it from devolving into the "Kmart of the profession" while avoiding the opacity of the most narrow boutique journals.

First on her agenda was an aesthetic overhaul. The journal's appearance was infamous: "I have always found PMLA graphically ugly and the mid-80s redesign didn't help," wrote British literary scholar Terry Castle in a typical assessment in 1995. "It remains incorrigibly schoolmarmish in looks and format." No longer. The January PMLA sports a lush, three-color cover design, as well as catchy cover lines like "The negative force of 'crash aesthetics'" advertising the content. The overhaul comes courtesy of Toni Ellis, who is responsible for the dapper look of Signs.

On a more substantive level, Banta has also solicited opinions from foreign scholars on how well PMLA serves them. Some respondents in the October 1998 issue were euphoric as only literature professors can be: PMLA is "the metonymic displacement or synecdochic condensation of the wish-dream," gushed one Korean scholar. Others fumed: One French professor likened the articles he had read to "mass-buried stillborns," while a scholar in the Philippines explained that intellectuals in his country are too busy with "armed political struggle" to read something as frivolous as PMLA.

More likely to provoke controversy, however, is PMLA's decision to reconsider its famous—or infamous—blind-review process. The system was established in 1980 after a rancorous fight in which minority and female scholars complained that they were shut out of the journal by an old-boy network. Certain names atop an article virtually guaranteed acceptance, the argument went, and those names belonged almost invariably to white males. As a result, elaborate mechanisms to guarantee authorial anonymity were instituted. Today numerical codes are given to articles at the MLA's New York City offices before they are sent out for review. Writers must also avoid self-citations and giveaway references in their manuscripts. Two scholars read each submission, offering detailed comments. They can then reject it, send it along to the editorial board, or, in borderline cases, refer it to a third reviewer. It can take up to a year and a half from the time a manuscript is dropped in the mail to its appearance in print (in contrast to the mere months it takes to get commissioned essays into print in other journals).

PMLA is "the metonymic displacement or synecdochic condensation of the wish-dream," gushed one Korean scholar.

"Overall, of course, there are some wonderful articles," says Carol Thomas Neely, a recent editorial board member. "But why, given this rigorous review process, and all the rewriting, aren't more of them better?"

In fact, PMLA's current editorial board decided, all the rigor and rewriting may be part of the problem. "Once you are established as a scholar, there is not a lot of motivation to go through what can be a brutal editorial process," says David Rodowick, a professor of English and visual studies at the University of Rochester and an editorial board member. Rodowick confesses he has never submitted an article. Concluding that the journal's blind review was an obstacle to attracting top scholars to its pages, Banta's editorial board wants to eliminate blind review altogether. Now it's up to the MLA executive council to approve the change.

Banta's editorial board wants to eliminate blind review altogether.

In the original, late-1970s brouhaha over blind review, Stanley Fish made the most memorable argument against it. In a notorious essay titled "No Bias, No Merit," he argued that trying to divorce "pure merit" from "extraneous circumstances" was a quixotic and theoretically naive quest where literary criticism was concerned. An article by a well-known scholar, he postulated, was literally a "different paper" from the exact same text written by an unknown. In dismissing books XI and XII of Paradise Lost as an "untranslatable lump of futurity," for example, C.S. Lewis set the terms of discussion of those texts for decades—precisely because he was C.S. Lewis. On a more pragmatic note, Fish wrote: "I have paid my dues and earned the benefit of the doubt I now enjoy, and don't see why others shouldn't labor in the vineyards as I did."

Fish now says he will wait to hear PMLA's arguments before taking sides, but junior scholars may detect echoes of his hauteur in the new campaign against blind review, despite the milder locutions of the current MLA officers. "I do have a commitment to graduate students, and I want them to continue to get essays published in PMLA," says Carol Thomas Neely. "We would hope to get the same range of submissions, but to get more well-known people willing to submit articles." There is plenty of middle ground in the debate, she insists. For example, coordinators of special-topic issues and forums could be allowed to solicit some articles from academics whose work has defined the subject under consideration. Moves in this direction are already in the works.

The ultimate arbiter, the seventeen-member MLA executive council, appears divided on the issue. "I, for one, oppose ending the anonymous submission policy for PMLA essays," says CUNY professor Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick, a council member. "I oppose it for exactly the same reasons—concerning access, democratization of the profession, et cetera—as those for which the policy was instituted in the first place."

One would think that the greatest resistance to abolishing the blind-review process would come from those who stand to benefit from it most: graduate students. But given that they've been weaned in an academic culture where having the right connections can push one far ahead, some students may not realize just how PMLA is different. "I was really surprised that I could submit something anonymously to PMLA," says David Sedley, a comparative literature grad student at Princeton whose essay "Sublimity and Skepticism in Montaigne" appeared in the October issue. "I don't know anyone over there." Sedley's colleagues may not know what a good thing they had until it's too late.

CHRISTOPHER SHEA

SOUND EFFECTS

WHEN FRANÇOIS MITTERRAND SWEPT TO POWER in 1981, some observers attributed his victory to a poster showing the Socialist candidate at the foot of a village bell tower, the ancient symbol of French rural life. In Swann's Way, Proust begins his evocation of Combray with a description of the church steeple that "shaped and crowned and consecrated every occupation, every hour of the day, every view in the town." The bell within was not only the "voice of the church" but the voice of the whole community—used to sound the alarm, to call the faithful to prayer or workers home from the fields, to protect trees from frost, and to clear the air of disease and demons. And yet even in a nation so fond of its "ringing towns," the historian Alain Corbin argues, the true importance of the bell has been lost. In a new book, Village Bells: Sound and Meaning in the Nineteenth-Century French Countryside (Columbia), he contends that to ignore the role of bells is to turn a deaf ear to the deepest sources of French national identity.

Bells and their ringers would seem a slim thread on which to hang an ambitious argument about the rise of individualism, the desacralization of time and space, the loosening of the power of the clergy, and the forging of a modern, democratic nation out of some thirty thousand fiercely independent communes. But as Corbin writes in his preface, one route to understanding the past is to study "what is unusual, and what is dismissed as absurd." More than just a painstaking evocation of a vanished auditory landscape, Village Bells is a meditation on the process by which the past becomes a mass of easily ignored words, "set apart and constituted as...dark continents hidden in archives." Certainly, Corbin has his work cut out for him: He has launched something of an ambitious solo mapping expedition. While there have been numerous studies of the thousand or so bread riots that rocked nineteenth-century France, few scholars have attempted to take account of the ten thousand often ridiculous-sounding disputes over the volume, duration, and occasions of bell ringing in provincial records of the same period. Even "campanarian," the adjective (meaning "of or pertaining to bells") that Corbin attaches to his inquiry, has slipped into oblivion. As a reviewer for Le Monde noted, the word has disappeared from the Grand Robert dictionary, France's equivalent of Webster's.

An idiosyncratic descendant of the annales school of social history, Corbin has established himself as one of the France's most prominent historians, with books on such far-flung topics as nineteenth-century prostitution, beach-going, and mob violence. Village Bells stands as a sequel of sorts to The Foul and the Fragrant, his miasmic 1982 account of two hundred years of shifting French attitudes toward rot and stench. In these books, Corbin shows how growing resistance to the intrusions of smells and bells into the private realm coincided with an increase in government regulation of the public realm.

French pride in its ringing towns and their esprit du clocher (literally "spirit of ringing" but usually rendered, the translator Martin Thom notes, as parochialism or localism), dates to the Renaissance. But Corbin's story of campanarian modernization and decline begins with the Revolution. On July 14, 1790, the day of the Festival of the Federation, simultaneous pealings across the nation, he writes, "marked collective rejoicing with a volume, density, and intensity we may never know again." But beginning in 1791, a series of regulatory laws limited the citizens' "right to noise" and attempted to insert bell ringing—until then the province of the local priest—into a framework of national, secularized citizenship. As churches were combined and, later, suppressed, bells were limited to civic functions and, in many cases, removed. Despite considerable local resistance, more than fifty thousand tons of metal were extracted from bell towers, and many bells were melted down to make cannons. As one local official put it, "These monuments to the luxury of our cities and to the vanity of their inhabitants can be more usefully employed in bringing terror and death."

The ancient habit of bell ringing, however, could not be so easily quashed. On Easter Sunday, 1802, the tenor bell in Notre Dame rang in celebration of both the Concordat between Napoleon and the Pope and the Treaty of Amiens. A few minutes later, all the bells in the capital followed—producing a "magic lantern slide," Corbin writes, that lived long in popular historical memory as the moment the Revolution ended. But with the postrevolutionary resumption of religious ringing in towns across the nation came an intense period of conflict and confusion that often had little to do with national political divisions. Disputes erupted over "abductions" and "counterabductions" of bells that had been moved during the Revolution, over who would pay for the frequent recasting of bells deemed too "baroque sounding" or "ridiculous," over who would serve as godparents so as to avoid a "bastard bell," and—most importantly—over what rights secular authorities had to enter the church and ring. In the struggle for power between "the stole and the sash," bell towers were held by both sides to be prime sites of "excesses"—whether of religious fanaticism or of lewd and inappropriate behavior by children, mockers, or drunkards. In one of the most famous disputes, Corbin recounts, a bishop in a town in the Lower Rhine denounced ringing to signal waste collection as "prostituting" the bell.

Few scholars have taken account of the ten thousand often ridiculous-sounding disputes over bell ringing during the nineteenth century.

Corbin dates the real decline in bell ringing to about 1860. By that time, the industrialization of bell production and the rise of sleeping late and other changes in "chronobiological behavior" had doomed the bell. This was especially true in urban milieus, where residents were more likely to carouse through newly illuminated streets late into the night and less likely to wake up early for work or prayer. In 1886, an editorial in La Lanterne launched a strident campaign on behalf of "law-abiding people who have better things to do than roam the streets before sunrise in order to go and catch pneumonia in those unhygienic establishments called churches." Ten years later, the women of Aurillac printed a petition against the lugubrious rumblings of the local cathedral, accusing the chimes of "battering us about the head and instilling sadness and grief in our hearts" and "banishing the sweet thoughts and tender feelings that we harbor toward sex."

The women of Aurillac accused one church's bells of "banishing the sweet thoughts and tender feelings that we harbor toward sex."

Campanarian inquiry itself, Corbin writes, is now a fact of history. He devotes his final pages to "campomania," the late-nineteenth-century vogue among antiquarian-minded doctors, teachers, poets, and other members of the urban elite for cataloging the chimes of rural France. Many of this short-lived breed of campanologists wanted to achieve a synthesis of rational, positivist historical inquiry and a nostalgic, romantic appreciation of bells. It is these twin impulses from which Corbin's own lyrical, melancholy, yet painstakingly precise project seems to spring.

While Corbin mourns "our decidedly casual attitude toward bells," they continue to reverberate powerfully as national symbols among the French. To celebrate the millennium, the French government is considering casting the most powerful bell on the planet, audible within a radius of thirty kilometers. But as Corbin points out, bells waned not because they had become less powerful—in fact, thanks to modern casting techniques, late-nineteenth-century peals were louder than ever—but because people had lost the habit of "intense listening" needed to decode their meanings. Can even the most deafening of chimes, his book invites us to ask, raise the dead? Or is that the less clangorous work of the historian?

Art & Ideas from Phaidon Press

Barnes & Noble College Bookstores are pleased to offer this selection of Art & Ideas, Phaidon Press' ground breaking new series that offers up-to-date, authoritative books on every aspect of art history around the world.

Written by outstanding scholars and produced to the highest quality in art publishing, this lively, highly illustrated series places art and architecture firmly in the context of the culture and ideas in which they were created. Although each volume is a self-sufficient survey of its subject, together this series is a complete introduction to world art.

Dalí

by Robert Radford

Radford analyzes the artist's personality and the rich variety of his work against the background of ideological and political conflict that erupted in the Spanish Civil War. He traces Dalí from his crucial early years in the Spanish town of Figueras to membership in the Surrealist group of 1930s' Paris and on to New York and Hollywood, where his calculatedly extravagant behavior made him a media star. *(Phaidon) paperback, 20% discounted price: $15.96

DEAD WHITE MUMMIES

IN THOMAS HOBBES'S FAMOUS WORDS, LIFE before civilization was "solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short." And these adjectives, it's generally believed, apply equally well to early humans themselves—especially "short." So it came as quite a surprise to archaeologists digging in China's westernmost province of Xinjiang (also known as Chinese Turkestan or the Uyghur Autonomous Region) to find the beautifully preserved mummies of strapping six-footers in tombs dating back to 1000 B.C. One of these mummies, dubbed "Cherchen Man" (after the site where he was dug up), measures an intimidating six feet six, and that's not all. As he lies in his glass case in the state museum in Xinjiang's capital of Ürümchi, visitors can clearly see that his braided hair and beard are sandy blond, what's left of his complexion is fair, and his nose is a giant aquiline beak. Several of Cherchen Man's brethren were buried with blue semiprecious stones placed over their eyes, which, their excavators believe, suggests their eyes were blue.

At another site called Qawrighul, near the defunct town of Loulan, archaeologists unearthed the body of a young Caucasian woman dressed in furs and a feathered cap. Even as a mummy, she was so surpassingly lovely that the locals christened her "The Beauty of Loulan," and she has become a kind of homegrown sex symbol. A painting of her as she may have looked three thousand years ago now graces the cover of more than one CD of Turkic music.

The condition of these bodies is extraordinary. They were not intentionally mummified the way the ancient Egyptians were; they were simply buried, and the unique climate of the area took care of the rest. Essentially, they were freeze-dried; during the winter, cold, dry sand underneath the bottomless coffins quickly sucked the moisture out of the bodies, leaving them among the best-preserved ancient corpses in the world.

Western experts have found more than a hundred desiccated corpses (most of which seem to be Caucasian) in tombs throughout the Tarim Basin, a thirty-thousand-square-mile area lying between Tibet and Mongolia. And now, one of these experts, Occidental College linguist, archaeologist, and textile historian Elizabeth Wayland Barber, has published her theory of how they got there. In The Mummies of Ürümchi (Norton), Barber draws on a wide array of evidence to support her conjecture that the mummies were Indo-Europeans who migrated to central Asia from places as far away as central Europe.

Barber's expertise came in handy in identifying the Turkestan mummies because the climate preserved not only their bodies but their richly colored clothing as well: shirts, jackets, trousers, belts, caps, and leggings in a profusion of stripes that, as Barber writes, "put Ronald McDonald in the shade." But these impressive wardrobes, though gorgeous to behold even beneath centuries of grime, are in Barber's book grist for the mill of historical detection. Faced with tombs containing no writing and not obviously connected to any known culture, Barber used textile analysis to make bold guesses about their origins. Like Sherlock Holmes, who could tell where a man had been by examining the hem of his coat, Barber, along with Irene Good, a textile expert from the University of Pennsylvania, followed the trail of a stitch across the vast steppe lands to identify these mysterious ancient people.

At one burial site, mummies were found clad in garments woven in what the experts call a "two-over-two diagonal twill weave." If you think this sounds like a description from the J. Crew catalog, then you're on the right track: The designs are Western in derivation, remarkably similar, in fact, to the plaids found on Celtic tartans. Only one other ancient site in the world has yielded up a similar fabric, and it's thousands of miles away in Hallstatt, a Bronze Age (c. 1100–500 B.C.) salt-mining center in the Austrian Alps. Plaid is virtually synonymous with Celtic culture, and Hallstatt, in those days, was a Celtic settlement.

But what about Cherchen Man? The fabrics he and his burial mates wear are made of a cruder twill without plaid patterns, so they're more difficult to trace. Luckily, though, Barber doesn't limit her techniques to textile analysis alone, but expands her investigation to include other material and linguistic evidence: Most of the oldest bodies were buried with sprigs of the plant ephedra—a stimulant from which we derive the over-the-counter decongestants Sudafed and Act-

PRAISE FOR THE FRENCH EDITION:

"...A widely researched book which takes a fastidiously balanced view of its subject. Too many Colette biographies have veered between salacity and saccharine adulation (Colette as earth mother with the dirt and grit taken out, an image she herself promulgated in later life). In fact, one of Colette's charms is that she was a distinctly outré figure in turn-of-the-century Paris at its most outré. Her sheer curiosity about life is here rewarded by her biographers' curiosity about her own."

ified. Three millennia ago, however, ephedra was an ingredient in a hallucinatory ritual beverage consumed by ancient Iranians. "To demonstrate a shared ancestry, we need some shared trait that is totally off the wall," Barber writes. If we could find such a trait, she reasons, "then we would know in our hearts that they came out of the same tradition." Like a distinctive plaid twill weave, the ritual use of ephedra is far enough off the wall to qualify. Or so Barber believes, and she backs up her hunch with more material evidence in the form of hats—high, conical "witches' hats" found in Tarim tombs, which resemble the headgear worn by the Iranian magi. And lest the presence of ancient Iranians in western China seem too improbable, she cites an old Chinese word, myag—meaning a kind of court soothsayer. According to Victor Mair, the sinologist at the University of Pennsylvania who organized the expedition of Western scholars to Ürümchi, myag is a loanword from the Persian magus. So Barber concludes that Cherchen Man and his kin were most likely Iranians—by which she means Indo-Europeans who had migrated eastward to Turkestan, passing through and settling in Iran along the way. Of course, because of ethnic mixing, they bear little physical resemblance to the people of modern Iran.

They may turn out to bear a close genetic resemblance to other present-day people, though. Dr. Paolo Francalacci, a geneticist at the University of Sassari in Italy, is comparing the mummies' DNA with that of living people in central Europe. Although his studies are still in the early stages, preliminary results suggest a relationship between these two groups separated by three thousand years and three thousand miles.

So what were these northern-European-looking folk doing in the high-plains heart of Asia? Liberated by their domestication of horses and sheep during the fourth millennium B.C., the Indo-Europeans, Barber theorizes, traded the sedentary life for the nomadic life and were thereafter obliged to keep moving in search of water and grazing lands. But one can't help wondering whether her findings will fuel the fires of those who see history in racial terms. After all, one of the fondest dreams of Aryan ideologues has been of a far-off sanctuary for celestially pure white folks in the mountain fastness—call it Ultima Thule or Shangri-La. Stories of Jesus sojourning in Kashmir still stir the imagination of the lunatic fringe. But Barber will have none of this. "What this means to me," she says, "is that we're all related."

THE DEPARTMENT THAT

THE DEFLATION OF DUKE ENGLISH

BY DAVID YAFFE

IN 1967, STANLEY FISH WROTE ABOUT a character who built a mighty kingdom through sheer force of will. But this story had an ironic twist: The seeds of the kingdom's destruction were present from its inception. Although Fish was writing about Milton's Satan in Surprised by Sin, he could have been prophesying the fate of the Duke English department, which he chaired from 1986 to 1992.

The story of what happened during Fish's chairmanship is the stuff of academic legend and the source of epidemic institution envy: With shameless—and in academe unheard-of—entrepreneurial gusto, Fish took a respectable but staid Southern English department and transformed it into the professional powerhouse of the day. Fish—who had been recruited at the suggestion of the recently appointed Frank Lentricchia—had a knack for hiring scholars who were stars or who were about to become stars: neopragmatist literary theorist Barbara Herrnstein Smith, queer theorists Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick and Michael Moon, and, for a brief moment, future African-American studies institution builder Henry Louis Gates Jr. Even a decade earlier, it might have seemed crass for a department simply to buy its way into prominence. But the stigma of conspicuous consumption had faded considerably in the go-go 1980s, and academia was enjoying its moment of high glamour. For the most well known academics, the rules of the professional game had come to resemble big-time sports or stock market speculation: Play for maximum stakes and then get out while the getting is good.

And at Duke, getting out has become a popular option for most of the professors who made the department famous. When an external review committee arrived last spring to perform a routine six-year evaluation, they were shocked by what they found. Sedgwick, Moon, and their fellow queer theorist, Renaissance scholar Jonathan Goldberg, had just accepted offers elsewhere; Americanist Jane Tompkins had practically quit teaching, and had worked as a cook at a local health food restaurant; American Literature editor Cathy N. Davidson had bolted to administration; medievalist Lee Patterson and his wife, Annabel, whose field is the Renaissance, had defected to Yale; and Frank Lentricchia, though he remained at Duke, had left the department and denounced his field (in the pages of this magazine), becoming, in effect, The Artist Formerly Known as Frank Lentricchia.

There seemed little motivation to replenish the dwindling ranks. "We find the Duke English department in a seriously weakened condition; more weakened, perhaps, even than its own internal critics realize," the external reviewers—Paul Hunter, Marjorie Perloff, Paul Strohm, and Eric Sundquist—wrote last May. "Its meteoric rise has given way to a relatively rapid descent. This is not to say that the department lacks excellent faculty; but the current department, except by virtue of its afterglow, cannot reasonably be considered top-ranked." They cited the absence of a clear departmental mission; a leadership and personnel emergency; desperately low morale; and numerous procedural irregularities. They also recounted hearing what amounted to "litanies of perceived deception and duplicity" from disgruntled faculty. Even more disturbing, perhaps, the reviewers described a department in which basic services—like teaching—had become a random, arbitrary affair. "The department still finds itself without anything we would be disposed to describe as an undergraduate or a graduate curriculum," they wrote. Fish soon followed with a bombshell of his own: In July he announced that he and his wife, Jane Tompkins, were leaving for the University of Illinois at Chicago, where he would serve as dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The revelation that Fish's empire was in crisis provoked a wave of Schadenfreude through the literary profession and a front-page story in The New York Times. But understanding the exodus has proved an elusive hermeneutic game. The story of Duke's fall from grace seems less a morality tale than a postmodern pastiche—a dizzying refraction of the familiar narratives of academic dissension in the 1990s. Old Guard against Young Turks, cultural studies against literary criticism, left versus right, globe-trotting celebrities versus classroom-loving teachers—all of these antagonisms seem at one moment to apply, at the next to be beside the point. The salient question may be not why did the Duke English department collapse, but what was it in the first place? The apt literary analogy might be not Milton's Paradise but Gertrude Stein's Oakland: Perhaps there was just no there there.

Fish insists that his experiment was a grand success. "If something endures for twelve or thirteen years in the academic profession," he says, "if, as Yeats would say, the center holds for that long, then that is what should be marveled at, not that there is a loss of personnel now." And Eve Sedgwick, in spite of her current disaffection, agrees: "What I come away from this train wreck feeling is not, 'Oh, what a terrible train wreck,' but that it was a real accomplishment."

But where was the train heading before it ran off the rails?

IN 1984 Duke administrators decided it was time to dry out the beer kegs and devote considerable resources to pushing the school into the front rank of national research universities. The man they brought in to propel the English department onto the national stage was Frank Lentricchia, who received a Ph.D. from Duke in the 1960s, back when the place was no big deal. Lentricchia turned out to be perhaps that department's most famous product. While writing a series of influential studies of Frost and Stevens and some groundbreaking books on critical theory—including After the New Criticism (1981), still used as a textbook for graduate theory surveys—he had moved from UC-Irvine to Rice University before returning to his alma mater.

It was Lentricchia who suggested bringing Stanley Fish and Jane Tompkins into the English department in 1985; he also suggested recruiting Fredric Jameson from UC-Santa Cruz to chair the Literature Program, a separate entity that would advertise itself as "a new approach to literary study"—a comp lit, cultural studies, and critical theory program rolled into one. Fish had made a name for himself as a renegade Miltonist and an original proponent of reader-response criticism. His 1980 book, Is There a Text in This Class? had upended what was left of New Critical formalism by suggesting that the answer to its title's question was, in essence, no. When Duke approached him, Fish had just turned down an offer from the Columbia English department. Jameson, meanwhile, was also already famous. The author of Marxism and Form (1971) and The Political Unconscious (1981), he was considered America's leading Marxist literary critic and a worthy heir to the Frankfurt School philosophers.

From the beginning, the new Duke was not just about critical theory, it was about critical theory in pairs. Indeed, couples hiring was an important status symbol for this nouveau-riche department. If for a particular couple a joint hire was the ultimate proof of desirability, evidence that they—not the university—controlled the terms of their appointment, then for the social-climbing Duke spousal hires were a showy way of publicizing deep pockets and infinite largesse.

While Fish was chairing the English department at Johns Hopkins, Tompkins was teaching at Temple University, and they were eager to find jobs in the same place. Fish's colleague at Hopkins, Lee Patterson, and his wife, Annabel, a professor at the University of Maryland, had similar desires. By 1986 Duke had made both couples offers, and an academic empire was born.

Other crucial hires came in quick succession. The following year, Barbara Herrnstein Smith was recruited from the University of Pennsylvania ("She was already in the stratosphere," Fish recalls), along with Michael Moon, a talented young Johns Hopkins Ph.D. whose interests were in nineteenth-century American literature and gay studies. In 1988 Duke managed to snag Henry Louis Gates away from Cornell and to keep him for a year before he ascended to Harvard. (Fish now marvels at Gates as perhaps the only person more savvy than himself.) The year 1988 also brought the professor who, perhaps more than anyone else of late, has been responsible for drawing national attention—and notoriety—to the department: Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick.

Sedgwick, who came to Duke from Amherst, was a Victorianist committed to exploring the place of gender and sexuality in literature. Her book Between Men (1985), a study of latent homoerotic tropes and male power in Victorian fiction, was a crucial precursor to queer studies, written before the field even had a name. Her first book at Duke, The Epistemology of the Closet (1990), a collection of complex investigations of the logic of sexual desire and identity in the writings of Proust, Nietzsche, James, Wilde, and Melville, would consolidate her national reputation and help to inaugurate the "queer moment" in the humanities. Sedgwick may or may not have been the most famous person to teach at Duke during Fish's reign, but there is nobody more closely associated with what could be called a Duke School. Today, when it seems every other paper at the MLA has a title like "Queering Ben Jonson," Sedgwick is the scholar most credited—or blamed—for queer theory's ascendancy.

IN THE EARLY 1990s, the Duke English department's growing appeal to graduate students and Fish's extraordinary popularity with colleagues and administrators masked a troubling reality. In retrospect, the report of an external review committee that visited the department in April 1992, toward the end of Fish's term as chair, has an eerie, prophetic power—as if written by a chorus of Cassandras. After pausing to applaud Fish's accomplishments—his record on hirings, the new selectivity in graduate admissions, and the surge in undergraduate English majors—the tone turned darker. The reviewers, Richard Brodhead, Myra Jehlen, Del Kolve, and Jerome McGann, issued a number of stern warnings. "The need to acquire distinguished faculty and to create the conditions that would lure them properly dominated the department's agenda in recent years, and made civic issues—issues of the faculty's duties at the school it moved to—a recessive concern," they wrote. "But Duke's very success in the phase of faculty acquisition...makes it time, now, for this temporarily-ignored other part of the departmental agenda to be embraced as a high priority. To put it bluntly: should the department fail to make progress on this important matter it might expect to face serious difficulties before long."

The committee enumerated the trouble spots. On the subject of the graduate curriculum, they reported that the single most frequent complaint—or was it a boast?—they heard from faculty was: "There is no curriculum; we each merely teach what we want to teach." This statement was borne out by a look at the course bulletin, "a hodgepodge of uncoordinated offerings" in which "broad foundational courses" were few and evidence of collective faculty planning was scant. With the rise of interdisciplinary scholarship and theory, it seemed that the period survey course—long the mainstay of graduate English education—was going by the boards.

DUKE ENGLISH'S "METEORIC RISE," WROTE THE EXTERNAL REVIEWERS, "HAS GIVEN WAY TO A RELATIVELY RAPID DESCENT."

Was the graduate program "sufficiently rigorous"? the committee wondered. Eight courses, they noted, were all the course work required to obtain an English Ph.D. at Duke—significantly fewer than elsewhere. (The reviewers had the same reservation about the undergraduate requirements, noting that "the number of courses that make a major in English at Duke—eight—is strikingly low compared to other schools of comparable quality.") At the same time, they observed, graduate students were expected to carry a relatively heavy 2–1 teaching load beginning in their second year. (Presumably this policy allowed the department to compensate for the sweet deals that guaranteed its star hires permanently reduced teaching loads and other special considerations.) Too little foundational course work and too much grad student teaching, the reviewers implied, added up to—if not exploitation exactly, then at least inadequate preparation for a tenure-track job. "We are not persuaded, in view of the dismal job market all Ph.D. programs have recently faced, that Duke's light requirements for extensive expertise are the sole cause of its sorry recent placement record," they wrote, "but it is a fact that the structure of its program virtually discourages generality of preparation.

Though the committee was optimistic that a faculty as talented as Duke's could solve its problems, overall the report's implications were ominous. But who was listening? For academy watchers, an admiring May 1992 profile in The New York Times Magazine confirmed Fish's presence on the national scene. Here was "the epitome of the academic as showman, a new breed of superstar as much concerned with professional notoriety as with the humdrum details of scholarship." He was also a blithely autocratic leader: "I would announce changes and see if anyone said anything," he told the magazine. "No one ever did." In passing, the article mentioned that the perceived radicalism of Fish's handpicked hires had provoked written complaints from alumni and compelled Duke's president to send out a reassuring letter citing the department's "traditional literary offerings." But this, the Times implied, was proof of Fish's extraordinary success as a provocateur. No mention was made of curricular disarray or of unhappy or overworked graduate students, or the external review committee's visit. As far as the public could tell, the party at Duke was still in full swing.

IN FACT, an unlikely transformation was under way. What had been a highly centralized fiefdom run by Fish's diktat became under his successor, eighteenth-century scholar Wallace Jackson, a diffuse assortment of individuals pursuing increasingly idiosyncratic, self-referential projects, often requiring them to disappear from campus for months at a time on extended unpaid leaves. Celebrated and castigated for their innovative approaches to the study of literature, many of Duke's stars were turning their attention to other subjects: mostly themselves.

True, there had been hints that the turn to introspection was coming. A 1987 article by Sedgwick, "A Poem Is Being Written," first published in the journal Representations and reprinted in her anthology Tendencies (1993), includes memories of childhood spankings and long passages of highly personal poetry. But nothing prepared academe for the sheer volume of confessional writings and recollections that emerged from the Duke English department between 1993 and 1994. The Moi critics, as Adam Begley dubbed them in a 1994 Lingua Franca article, peddled their life stories to commercial presses like Random House and Dutton. Already well known in the corridors of academe, with books like Cathy Davidson's 36 Views of Mount Fuji: On Finding Myself in Japan (1993), Jane Tompkins's A Life in School (1994), and Frank Lentricchia's gritty The Edge of Night: A Confession (1994), the Moi critics were now striving for mainstream fame. (Anticipating today's memoir boom by several years, few of them received it.) Sedgwick herself produced a volume of poetry, Fat Art, Thin Art, in 1994. For his part, Fish, who has generally been content to let others write about him, was dividing his time between the English department and Duke Law School, where he had secured a joint appointment in spite of his lack of a law degree and his frequently stated position that legal interpretation and literary criticism had nothing in common.

In retrospect, the department's memoir-writing phase seems virtually predestined, an inevitable turn for an institution that made little effort to foster a sense of collective purpose or identity among its members, stressing their value as individuals instead. And for a department that never had much intellectual infrastructure or cohesion to begin with, the faculty's inward flight left an irreparable vacuum. A couple of the Moi critics, notably Tompkins and Lentricchia, abandoned literary criticism and theory altogether—and stopped publishing the kind of work that career-conscious graduate students could emulate. By the end of 1994, the most professionally active figures in the department were the queer theorists—Sedgwick, Moon, and Goldberg, who had been dividing his time between Hopkins and Duke. More often than not, the best graduate students who came to Duke during the Jackson years were interested in gender and sexuality, or in finding high-powered mentors. It must have been hard for the more traditional (and obscure) professors not to feel slighted. By the time Marianna Torgovnick ascended to the chair in 1996, the department's latent tensions and resentments had emerged in full force.

Torgovnick, a specialist in twentieth-century British fiction, had a publishing record that included both a much-discussed study of modernism's obsession with tribal cultures, Gone Primitive (1990), and—virtually obligatory by this point—a memoir, Crossing Ocean Parkway: Readings by an Italian-American Daughter (1994). In addition, Torgovnick was a protégée of Stanley Fish and the first woman to chair any major department at Duke, all of which made her, one might have thought, well qualified to improve upon Fish's vision, or at least to perpetuate it faithfully into the future.

But Torgovnick's term as chair was far from a success. "The dissatisfaction with the chair...is deep and widespread," noted the 1998 external review committee. "There was unanimous feeling that the present chair's term should not be extended beyond next year when her current three-year term ends.... More than a few of the faculty favored immediate change at whatever emotional and professional cost." Frank Lentricchia is one of Torgovnick's most outspoken critics. From his current perch in the Literature Program, he puts much of the blame for the department's current disarray on the shoulders of Torgovnick and her allies in the administration: "For two years prior to the devastating external review, a huge majority of the department—diverse in gender, race, and rank—had been informing the upper administration (and Stanley too, by the way) of its displeasure with the coterie that, with the chair's open assistance, subverted democratic process."

The charges are serious, yet the evidence of mismanagement is difficult to pin down. Many of the departures that took place on Torgovnick's watch, for example, cannot be attributed only to unhappiness with the department. Stanley Fish had long declared his intention to take an administrative position once a suitable offer materialized; Jonathan Goldberg was reportedly less than thrilled with North Carolina; Eve Sedgwick was ill with breast cancer and was seeking to join her husband, a professor of ophthalmology, in New York, where she is now Distinguished Professor of English at the CUNY Graduate Center.

What's more, for all the strong rhetoric of Torgovnick's critics, the alleged subversions of the democratic process seem surprisingly modest. Several professors mention her decision to schedule separate departmental meetings for faculty of different ranks; the plan was scotched when some of those professors circulated a petition against it. Another oft-repeated story involves Torgovnick's decision to select a student to accompany her to an MLA conference, despite student demands that the delegate be elected. Ultimately, the visit to the conference was canceled, and Torgovnick allegedly chided one graduate student that when he and his colleagues grew up they'd realize that democracy had nothing to do with departmental politics. Torgovnick waves aside all these allegations, pointing out that the meetings she planned for various faculty groups were informal get-togethers and "entirely supplemental" to the regularly scheduled departmental meetings that everyone attended. As for her ill-fated attempt to bring a student with her to an MLA conference, she says the episode was "essentially a misunderstanding." She says she assumed someone would volunteer to come along—"like having an extra ticket to a basketball game." She hadn't realized the graduate students would feel competitive and resentful.

Nevertheless, there's little doubt that tensions rose during Torgovnick's reign, and that these tensions were increasingly expressed in personal and ideological terms. Sedgwick paints a dark picture of intolerance and hostility. "I knew my time was very finite and my energy was very finite," she says of her decision to leave. "I have stuff I want to do with the next few years, and it's not grappling with people whom I don't respect. Now I don't know what took me so long to leave. It was really because I was just very disturbed by what seemed to be an increasing amount of anti-intellectualism and lack of support and respect for theory in general, for queer thought, for African-American study and faculty, and it seemed to me that the colleagues I respected immensely were marginalized, and I just hated that."

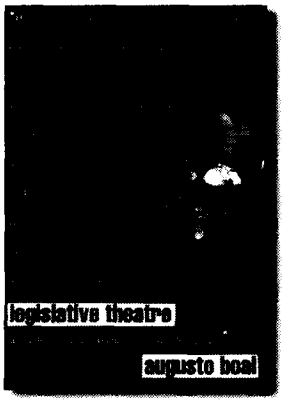
Asked to detail the kind of anti-intellectualism she encountered at Duke, Sedgwick alludes, somewhat vaguely, to colleagues who laughed at and dismissed work that is theoretical, "difficult," or simply not demarcated by a traditional period boundary. Moon also complains of anti-intellectualism—and adds another, even more incendiary charge. "The homophobia that I experienced and saw other people experience was certainly a factor in my decision to leave," he says, "but there were other matters of serious concern, such as anti-intellectualism. I'm glad to be out of there."

"It is predictable for Eve to portray herself and Moon and Goldberg as martyrs of some form of intellectual intolerance," says Thomas Pfau, an associate professor who came to Duke in 1991 and is the author of Wordsworth's Profession: Form, Class, and the Logic of Early Romantic Cultural Production (Stanford, 1997). "I think those people actually had an exclusionary and somewhat monomaniacal sense of what literature departments ought to be like." Pfau offers a specific example that he says illustrates these charges: "We had a search for a position in the department, and Eve found herself without any candidate that fit her bill. None of them seemed to be ideologically agreeable. In the department meeting, she actually suggested that we scuttle the whole search. And people considered that an act of sabotage because, of course, a lot of work goes into those searches. It was highly suspect that she would suggest such a thing, and it was very clear to everyone why she was saying that."

Sedgwick denies trying to commandeer faculty searches. "I don't understand what the deal is about that," she says. "People scuttle searches all the time. I came up with a bunch of candidates, I don't think any of them were very smart. It happens all the time." Besides, she says, many of the hires made by search committees that she chaired worked in fields that had nothing to do with queer theory. Indeed, Sedgwick's hires include Irene Tucker, a Victorianist who specializes in nationalism and Jewish issues, but not queer theory, and the medievalist David Aers, who writes about religion and ideology, not gender.

AND SO WE reach a standoff: Some professors accuse others of homophobia and anti-intellectualism; the targets of these charges respond with their own charges of empire lust and totalitarian power plays. Yet the rhetoric of all parties, for all its intensity, seems strangely general and ungrounded. The chair is assailed for all kinds of malfeasance, but the evidence against her seems not to match the severity of the charges. Looking at the department in pieces, it's difficult to imagine what it looked like whole or to identify the forces that shattered it.

PERFORMATIVE POLITICS



Legislative Theatre
Using Performance to Make Politics
Augusto Boal
Translated by Adrian Jackson

Legislative Theatre is the latest and most remarkable stage in the unique Augusto Boal project. It is an attempt to use theatre in a political context to create a truer form of democracy—a method to engage the populace. It is an extraordinary experiment in the potential of theatre to effect social change.

Perhaps it takes a professor like Victor Strandberg, a scholar of twentieth-century American literature who has been at Duke since 1966—nearly twenty years before Fish arrived—to offer the long view of the drama, to see the story's end in its beginning. "There was a huge change when Fish came in, and the change put this department on the map in a way that probably wouldn't have happened otherwise," he says. "I would say that we were a very standard, middle-of-the-road, probably conservative, traditional English department. I would say that there was nothing exciting about it, and I was probably a good representative of that status. When Fish and his new recruits came, what they bought here was critical theory. It was relatively new, and they were leading figures in it—reader-response theory, Marxism, queer theory. This was considered cutting edge and exciting and new. It galvanized a huge amount of attention when the media got hold of it, and, as a result, the graduate school operations went into higher gear. But after a tremendous burst of excitement, it's dissipated.

"When Eve says there was friction in the department, I don't think she is referring to old hands like me, who more or less sat quietly through most of this. She is talking about friction among the theory people, and that's understandable, because theory wants to be controversial and transgressive, and there was an inherent tendency for the important people to butt heads with one another."

LAST November, I drank with a group of Duke graduate students at an Indian restaurant–turned–Irish pub in Durham. They were preoccupied with the job crisis (like graduate students everywhere) and especially worried that their department's very public breakup would harm their already parlous chances. I asked them whether, if they were applying to graduate school now, they would choose Duke. Denise Fulbrook, a Victorianist writing a dissertation on melancholy, creativity, and female anal eroticism in nineteenth-century British literature, shook her head, telling me that since she worked on gender and sexuality, there would be nothing for her at Duke in its present form. But most of the students I talked with defended their choice and spoke well of their various mentors, even those who would not speak so well of each other.

And perhaps the students have reason for hope. Despite the 1992 committee's concerns about the job prospects of Duke's Ph.D.'s, the department's record of placing its graduate students has been impressive through the worst years of the current crunch. From 1991 to 1995, as the bottom was falling out of the market, a remarkable 71 percent of Duke's English Ph.D.'s landed tenure-track jobs. And last year, 60 percent of the students looking for jobs found them—still a respectable rate of success.

But will this record—perhaps the only empirical measure of the department's accomplishments—prove sustainable? Will Duke continue to attract talented students without a core group of eminent professors to train them? Looking for a savior, Duke has decided to stick with the devil it knows: Last spring, the administration announced that Stanley Fish himself would serve on a committee charged with taking control of the department from Torgovnick and seeking to reverse its decline. And even as he tries to restore his old kingdom, Fish will be busy building a new one. The University of Illinois at Chicago has made him its first star hire—to the tune of $230,000 a year, more than the governor of Illinois makes. "This is the biggest hire I will probably ever make!" UIC's provost Elizabeth Hoffman gushed to The Chronicle of Higher Education. But can the Duke model succeed at an urban commuter campus dependent for funding on a skeptical state government?

Even as some wonder whether it can be transplanted to Illinois, others wonder about the model's legacy back home. Echoing Thomas Pfau, Frank Lentricchia says: "There was an initial model at Duke, and with its aid, appointments were made on the basis of excellence alone. Ideological affinity counted for nothing. The initial model was displaced (after Eve's arrival), and appointments were made on the basis of political loyalties. Stanley used to be a champion of the initial model, but he was converted to the later model, and the English department he built so famously upon the initial model was in effect torn down. Stanley is an enthusiastic convert to the Church of What's Happening Now: I expect him to preach the new faith at UIC."

For her part, Sedgwick remains a believer. In spite of the Duke English department's fall, she insists, its moment of glory will remain a lasting tribute to "Stanley and people that put him up to it, a number of us who were here, our students. It was a wonderful thing to have happened."

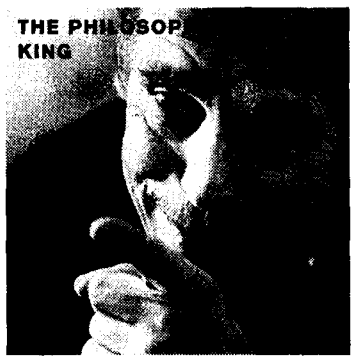
THE VELVET FOG... AND THE SATIN SCHOLARS



ARGUING THE WORLD WITH VACLAV HAVEL

BY JEN NESSEL

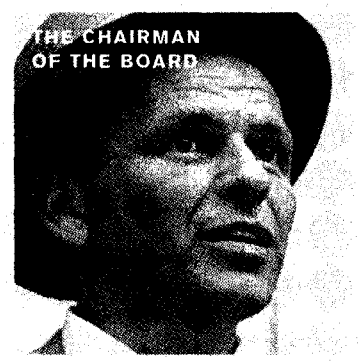
The Ruzyne airport in Prague has been remodeled in the last year. For decades, it was only equipped for one takeoff or landing at a time: They weren't expecting much travel, in or out. Now long carpeted halls lined with glass and steel lead to innumerable gates and duty-free shops selling Ferragamo and Hermès. They've left room to grow, though not all the new gates are in use yet. For me, it just means I have to schlep three times further with my suitcase to get to passport control.

The first time I visited Prague, in 1987, I was backpacking through eastern Europe, basically aiming for the beach in what was then Yugoslavia, when my travel partner prevailed upon me to stop in Prague—somehow, I had never heard that it was the most beautiful city in the world. She said, "But don't you want to talk to dissidents?" and I, a college student who didn't feel I had anything substantive to say to dissidents, wondered if we couldn't just do it my grandmother's way and send a peace quilt. My friend won. We stayed at the art nouveau Hotel Europa— right on Wenceslas Square—without a reservation, and we actually tried to call the dissident playwright Václav Havel, whose phone number my friend's well-connected mother had thrust upon us. Luckily, he was out of town at the time. We wandered, practically alone, across the Charles Bridge, and the only other tourists we saw were a handful of East Germans.

Now, of course, everything has changed. I spend several months out of every year in Prague, and I speak Czech. The city is perpetually mobbed with tourists, and its hotel rates rival New



THE BIRTH OF SINATRA STUDIES

BY JON WIENER

This November, Hofstra University brought more than twelve hundred people to Long Island to attend its conference, "Frank Sinatra: The Man, The Music, The Legend." There were forty-three panels and 120 scholarly papers. The New York Times, in a front-page story, called it "Jacques Derrida meets the Rat Pack." But "Sinatra scholars," it quickly became clear, come from two dramatically different groups: Fifty-something Italian-American men, most of whom gave papers on topics involving Italian-American identity, often in the first-person confessional mode; and twenty-something dissertation writers and recent York's. Prague is still the most beautiful city in the world, but it helps if you squint. There is Planet Hollywood, Kentucky Fried Chicken, Dunkin Donuts, and McDonald's (a chain founded, I point out to my Czech friends whenever they get too self-righteous, by a Czech American named Ray Kroc), as well as Versace, Dolce & Gabbana, Kenzo, DKNY, and all the other visible signs of globalization.

As it happens, it was globalization that brought me to Prague last October—along with Henry Kissinger, Hillary Rodham Clinton, Adam Michnik, Wei Jingsheng, and a few dozen other intellectuals, politicians, clerics, scientists, activists, and poets. We had come for a three-day conference at the Prague Castle—the second in a series collectively called Forum 2000—devoted to exploring the "prospects and problems of globalization" in order "to review what we have learned about ourselves and each other and to propose alternatives for the future." The forum is Václav Havel's brainchild, and he clearly hopes it will be his legacy, a place where the decency, civility, and honesty that made him a global hero can be fostered and spread. Havel, who has recently faced serious illness and the erosion of his domestic popularity, was not only the forum's host, but also its icon and patron saint. An elaborate brochure devoted to him was handed out with the conference press packets. It contained a brief biography, a listing of international honors and awards, and a sampling of wisdom drawn from Havel's writings and speeches. The back-cover photograph shows him walking along what looks like a seashore (presumably not in Bohemia, which has a coast only in Shakespeare's imagination), leaving footprints in the sand.

As he tries to shore up his own legacy, Havel is also trying to secure a place for Prague on the world stage. These days, the Czech Republic is no longer the poster country of postcommunism: Its economy lags behind Poland's and Hungary's, and its politicians are squabbling. But Prague still represents high-minded humanism in many parts of the world. At the opening ceremonies, Jirí Musil, the Czech sociologist who now chairs Forum 2000's program committee, expressed his hope that the series of conferences would yield "an appeal, maybe called the Prague Declaration,"

HAVEL CLEARLY WANTS PRAGUE TO BE A HOUSEHOLD WORD LIKE GENEVA, HELSINKI, CAMP DAVID, OR—FOR THAT MATTER—YALTA.

though he did not say just what it might declare. Prague, he said, is a seismograph for political earthquakes; central Europe is about bringing together ideas; and globalization is about the creation of central Europes everywhere. He and Havel clearly want Prague to be a household word like Geneva, Helsinki, Camp David, or—for that matter—Yalta. And over the next three days, many speakers saw fit to comment on the special affinity between the conference's theme and its setting; Polish journalist and former dissident Adam Michnik even managed to combine the two, coining the phrase "Prague globalization."

The Czech public, however, has asserted that it wants not one koruna of taxpayers' money spent on the forum. Funding therefore comes from the Nippon Foundation, a wealthy Japanese philanthropic organization founded in 1962 that gets its revenues from motorboat racing. The Nippon Foundation usually funds projects like leprosy control, artificial limbs for Cambodian amputees, the preservation of historically significant musical instruments, and fitness programs designed to combat "neurosis...[and] bullying" among Japanese schoolchildren. Their most intriguing initiative is a joint effort with the Japan Gateball Union to popularize "Gateball, Japan's own sport," overseas.

The program of the second Forum 2000 conference was no less ambitious than the Gateball project, and perhaps just as unlikely to yield tangible results. The overall topic of the first day, for example, was to be "Current Political Systems and Ph.D.'s in cultural studies, who gave papers on such topics as Sinatra and the performance of whiteness, and Sinatra and the construction of masculinity Meanwhile, the audience consisted mostly of aging Long Island Sinatra fans—former bobby-soxers and their gray-haired or balding husbands. The twelve hundred of them who registered paid $150 for the three-day affair. Their basic position was expressed by one who told a speaker: "You're overintellectualizing. Oceans 11 was just entertainment."

It rapidly became clear that the two groups of speakers had incompatible perspectives. These were dramatized at one of the first panels, "Frank Sinatra and the Politics of Cool." Rocco Marinaccio, an English professor at Manhattan College, presented a paper titled "I Get No Kick From Assimilation; or, 'My' Frank Sinatra Problem." He argued that Sinatra's greatness could be found in his resistance to assimilation at a time when Italian Americans were despised and discriminated against. The commentator, a ponytailed Hofstra sociologist named Mark Silver, responded that nevertheless, Sinatra in the 1940s and 1950s had all the privileges of the rich white male and that, for Silver, the really cool figures of the 1950s were black jazzmen, like Miles Davis.

When it came time for questions, an elderly male fan in the audience shouted at Silver, "What unmitigated gall! To come here and tear down his reputation. Go back to Moscow!"

"Sir," Silver replied testily, "a university is an arena of open opinion and free exchange of ideas." Marinaccio tried to jump in with a comment, but Silver cut him off. The audience then began chanting, "Let Rocco speak! Let Rocco speak!" I thought, "I've never been to an academic conference like this one."

The opening dinner and keynote address displayed another side of the conference. This was a black-tie event for Hofstra's Long Island elite: silver-haired men in tuxes with carefully folded handkerchiefs in their breast pockets, well-groomed women in furs. Hofstra president James Shuart took the podium and declared, "The Hofstra Presidential Medal is awarded periodically for outstanding contributions to American culture, science, or the arts. As president of Hofstra, it is now my great pleasure to present the Hofstra Presidential Medal posthumously to Frank Sinatra. Here to accept on behalf of the Sinatra family—ladies and gentlemen, please welcome Miss Tina Sinatra."

Tina, the dark-haired younger daughter who has taken on the role of keeper of the flame, looked gorgeous. To a standing ovation she stepped up to the podium with tears running down her cheeks. "For six months, it's been one day at a time for me," she said. "I want to thank everyone for this show of support." After thanking various friends in the audience, she said, "Dad loved well," but his male friends "got the best part of him, because they didn't have to take any of the crap." Apparently she was still working through some of her feelings.

Then it was time for the keynote speaker. Instead of a distinguished scholar or biographer, the conference organizers had picked the aging Vegas comedian Alan King. He told some Sinatra stories in the time-honored Vegas style: "Waiter says, 'Mr. Sinatra, would you like some water?' Frank says, 'I'm thirsty, not dirty.'"

There were the good times, he said, but there were also the bad times—

Patterns of Governance in Different Parts of the World and in the World as a Whole." And what was the point of it all? According to a written statement from Havel: "In today's global civilization the divisions between various cultural and religious groups, as well as those of civilizations, are stepping into the forefront. We should attempt to find common spiritual roots of various cultures and religions and, based on these, build new systems of global cooperation." With visions of eavesdropping on the great minds of the day as they solved the world's problems, I submitted my press credentials. I was also dying to get back to Prague.

THE OPENING ceremonies were held on Sunday night in Vladislav Hall, a great medieval space that used to host jousting matches. The press had to enter by the back way, up the equestrian staircase. Havel tiptoed in without fanfare before the guests arrived, went over to chat with a couple of the journalists, and then played with the TV camera set up in front of the stage, looking through the lens and spinning a full 360 degrees around. Everyone had been remarking that he looked healthier since he returned from his U.S. visit, where reporters questioned him about Monica Lewinsky and he responded by congratulating Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa.

Havel's wife, Dagmar, a strawberry bottle-blonde, arrived with the rest of the dignitaries. Czechs don't like her because they loved and respected Havel's first wife, Olga, and thought Havel remarried too quickly after she died; because Dagmar put Havel at risk at one point when she brought in New Age healers to treat him instead of doctors; and because they've all seen her breasts in a movie she made more than twenty years ago and think she's a bimbo. But mostly they don't like her because, when she moved into the castle, she brought her own puppies and kicked out Olga's old dog.

In his opening remarks, Havel said, "I hope that no one thinks that forums like these can influence the course of the world." But he nonetheless urged us to try, because we all share a responsibility and "we each start with ourselves." He told us that for years, Prague was the crossroads of many competing political claims, "so now, when we are free, why not be a crossroads of ideas?"

I HAD TROUBLE ASSOCIATING HENRY KISSINGER WITH THE HAPPENINGS OF '68. DID HE GO TO ROCK CONCERTS OF THE PLASTIC PEOPLE OF THE UNIVERSE?

HENRY KISSINGER, VACLAV HAVEL, AND JACQUES RUPNIK

ON MONDAY morning, in the Spanish Hall, where the Central Committee of the Communist Party used to convene, the first man of ideas took the stage. Henry Kissinger, looking benign and jowly, was introduced as a former professor at Harvard and the winner of the 1973 Nobel Peace Prize. He made the blithe, grandiose pronouncements of an elder statesman, such as: "To do great things—forgive me, Mr. President—you have to be a bit naive." (Throughout the event, I would notice that panelists repeatedly used words like "naive" and "optimist" as badges of honor.) On a unified Europe, Kissinger bravely predicted, "I don't see how it can succeed, and I don't see how it can possibly fail."

Kissinger held a mini press conference in the hall during a coffee break. He expounded on his long-standing connections with the city: "I was born in Germany and left in August of 1938—for me the fate of Czechoslovakia was the fate of freedom," and, "I had the honor of being here in Spring 1968—never a more exciting time." I had trouble associating him with the happenings and the counterculture of the time. Did he go to rock concerts of the Plastic People of the Universe?

IN WHAT WOULD prove the norm for the rest of the conference, the room pretty much emptied out once the star speaker was through—panelists, press, and the president (who can be excused because of his health and a meeting of European presidents in Vienna that Monday afternoon) drifted off.

Last year's attendees had included the Dalai Lama, Oscar Arias Sánchez, F.W. de Klerk, Crown Prince Hassan of Jordan, Elie Wiesel, Wole Soyinka, and Shimon Peres: One delegate didn't remember an empty chair during the whole conference. This year, the A-list was pretty much confined to Henry and Hillary, and the paucity of celebrities, combined with Havel's poor health and frequent absence, changed the tenor of the proceedings: People felt free to show up only when they were scheduled to speak. Cell phones went off every few minutes, and their owners scurried out to the corridor to answer them. All of which made for more monologue than dialogue.

The afternoon's session assessed the pros and cons of globalization. Hanna Suchocka, the former prime minister of Poland who has close ties to the Pope, was concerned with the moral decline brought on by globalization. It leads, she said, to "erosion of the family, moral instinct, and a sense of duty. Any challenge to the family is a curse." Overwhelmed by meaningless consumer choices, she warned that we face "the challenge of what some call a 'supermarket identity.'" What's more, we live in an age marked by the "moral and social atomization of the value-free Internet and two hundred television channels." Apparently, she doesn't like home shopping any more than I do.

The next speaker was Dr. Karan Singh, former Indian minister, governor, and ambassador to the United States, and a writer of philosophical essays, poetry, and devotional songs—who is also recognized as an outstanding singer. In response to Suchocka's tone of pessimism, Singh cited positive aspects of globalization, including the spread of different cultures' dance, music, food, and drink. At the same time, he warned, we are spreading drugs, sexually transmitted diseases, terrorism, and violence, and developing "a curious obsession with death, disaster, and dinosaurs."

On a more practical level, Singh called for the restructuring of the United Nations, especially the Security Council, and for an end to the domination of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, which should be replaced by more regional centers. He spoke of Mother Earth/Gaea/Bhavani Vasundhara and challenged us to "reverse our narrowly anthropocentric policies." He cautioned, "The suppression of the feminine...has been at the root of much of the horror and violence that we have witnessed in our own century."

He neglected to mention how the conference itself was suppressing the feminine. Of the forty-five participants, only two women were there for the whole time, and only three more were and the worst came in 1961, when Jack Kennedy canceled his trip to stay with Frank in Palm Springs—because of "some ridiculous investigation in Jersey." That "totally destroyed Frank. He blamed Bobby, and he hated Bobby after that." The audience began to get concerned—where was this story going?

"During the '68 primaries, I was working for Bobby. Frank came in one night and saw me with a Bobby button on my lapel. He walked up to me and ripped it off, along with most of my lapel. If he hadn't had three bodyguards with him, I would have taken him on." Uneasy glances had now spread to the head table.

"But not long after, Bobby was assassinated. Frank came over to my place. I didn't understand why. 'I came to pay a condolence call,' Frank told me." Here King started crying before saying, "That's what this guy was about." After a long pause, he added: "I'll always have the music—but I miss the man." Now he broke down in sobs and sank into the chair next to him at the head table. Tina moved to his side, hugging him and whispering words of consolation while the audience gave him a standing ovation. I thought, "I've never been to an academic conference like this one."

Then the president came back and said, "The Hofstra Presidential Medal is awarded periodically for outstanding contributions to American culture, science, or the arts. As president of Hofstra, it is my honor to present the Hofstra Presidential Medal to—Mr. Alan King!" Another standing ovation came as the president put the large medallion around King's neck.

King recovered his composure and said, "It's very nice, but, Mr. President, I have a bad neck—and this thing is heavy."

Then it was time for everybody to walk across campus to the Vic Damone concert.

The next morning at 8:30, there were more tears at the panel "Sinatra and Politics." An audience of eighty fans showed up despite the ungodly hour. This was my slot—I showed a clip from Sinatra's 1945 Academy Award–winning short, The House I Live In, a minimasterpiece of Popular Front culture. Sinatra stops a gang of working-class kids who have cornered a dark-haired loner in an inner-city alley on a brick ledge. The kids tell Frank,

WHEN ONE SPEAKER COMPARED SINATRA UNFAVORABLY WITH MILES DAVIS, AN AUDIENCE MEMBER REPLIED, "GO BACK TO MOSCOW."

"We don't like his religion." Evidently, the religion is Judaism. Sinatra recalls how Americans of all religions fought together against "the Japs" and tells the gang kids that racial and religious differences "make no difference except to a Nazi or somebody who's stupid." Then he sings them a song about "The people that I work with / The workers at my side...The right to speak my mind out / That's America to me."

The video clip on the TV screen ended, but before I could launch into my penetrating analysis, the audience broke into sustained and enthusiastic applause. It dawned on me that they had come to see the video—which had been listed in the program—rather than to hear my critique. Undaunted, I proceeded to read them my paper, which traced Sinatra's political movement from left to right in terms of his performance of this song—culminating in a 1986 prime-time TV special, the centennial salute to the Statue of Liberty, where Sinatra, now a Republican, sang the same song to President and Mrs. Reagan on the deck of an aircraft carrier.

I thought my argument was pretty good. I even showed them the 1986 clip to prove it. When Sinatra's song ended on-screen, the audience once there for just one panel. I found this appalling but perfectly Czech. Even the most educated, creative, free-spirited Bohemians can be pigs. Under the communists, there was state feminism and 99 percent female employment, the highest in the world. But Czech women still shouldered the burden of doing all the housework and child care on top of their full-time jobs. Young women today seem less wary of feminism, but the older generations are protective of their men, whom they feel were emasculated by the old regime and had power neither in the public sphere nor in the private, which at least was the domain of the women. But Czech gender relations go deeper than any political order: The national Easter tradition involves any male, from toddler to adult, cutting a switch from a young sapling and decorating it with ribbons—it's called a pomlázka—and then chasing any female of any age and beating her with it until, I swear to you, she gives him a decorated egg.

ON TUESDAY morning, the number of cameras in the hall tripled: Hillary had arrived. I wondered if she'd seen local billboards for an energy drink called Erektus that announce "JSME S TEBOU BILLE"—"We're with you Bill!"

The First Lady captured her audience. She never looked down at her notes and gestured confidently as she added a quaint metaphor to the communitarian repertoire. "I often think of society as a three-legged stool"—government, economy, and civil society are the legs. "We can't sit on it if one leg is shorter than another; they must be balanced and support one another." Whereas I tend to think of society as a three-legged race, with everyone tripping over each other until the finish line.

By the standards of the conference, Hillary was hip and witty when she told us that "the Republicans have among their constituents people who think the UN is invading the U.S. with black helicopters." Her final remarks were about the film Independence Day. "These movies always seem to start with an attack on Washington, D.C., which I don't really know how to take," she said, but at the end all peoples come together to fight the aliens, and while "we certainly don't expect it to come to that," it's an important show of unity. This was interesting, but I couldn't help thinking of two movies I preferred—Alien Nation and Brother From Another Planet—which make the point that aliens are just another race, often one we'd be eager to oppress. It's easy to unite against a common enemy: It's uniting without one that's the challenge.

When Hillary was finished, wave after wave of applause soaked the room. Then Karan Singh asked the real question: Yes, but "who is going to sit on that stool?"

WE STOPPED for lunch, and while I looked out the window to the courtyard below, I saw about fifty pensioners putting on a minidemonstration with banners and hand-lettered signs: THE CZECH GOVERNMENT IS DEPRIVING AMERICAN CITIZENS OF THEIR RIGHTFUL PROPERTY; DEAR MRS. CLINTON, PLEASE HELP US GAIN HUMAN RIGHTS IN THE CZECH REPUBLIC, and so on. Sadly, they had just missed Mrs. Clinton, so their pleas for justice probably went unheard. It seems they were protesting individual cases of restitution. The Czechs have returned much property to its pre-communist owners or their heirs, but while some people have had crumbling castles restituted to them, the issue gets tricky: Is the government only returning property seized by the communists? What about property taken from the Germans who were expelled after 1945? And what about the property the Nazis took from the Jews? The Catholic Church has reclaimed an enormous amount of property, but it's still suing the President's Office for St. Vitus's Cathedral in the Prague Castle. Who collects on collective guilt?

HILLARY departed, though not before the local papers had captured her in the Café Slavia sipping absinthe—symbol of European decadence and illegal in almost every other country in the world—with the Havels.

Tuesday afternoon's panel featured Hazel Henderson, described in the program as a "Futurist and author of many publications (among others, the well-known Building a Win-Win World) translated into almost all world languages." During an earlier break, I had cornered Henderson and asked her, what exactly is a futurist, and how do you get to be one? Her simplified answer was, "Remain interested in everything: Then you'll become a systems thinker." I resolved to try. Most futurists, according to Henderson, transcended some other discipline, such as economics, when they recognized "it wasn't holistic enough." She calls them a "group of academic outcasts" from places as far-flung as Beijing, Cairo, and Teheran. They "look at clusters of problems and try to see them in a synergistic way"; the futurist methodology is "scenario building, plotting how trends will interact, cancel, or amplify each other." Henderson is good friends with Alvin and Heidi Toffler: I forgot to ask her about Ariana Huffington.

In her speech, she told us about a syndicated financial news show that will look just like Wall Street Week, but will be called The Ethical Marketplace. She called on us to: Tax the currency speculators; create a global securities exchange commission, while central banks set up their own foreign exchanges as nonprofit public utilities; correct national accounts by bringing in social and environmental costs, human capital, and so on, and thereby move to real quality-of-life indicators; and shift our tax structures from taxing payrolls to taxing waste and overuse, simultaneously repealing subsidies to big corporations. She's obviously a professional attendee—she cited conferences and resolutions from Copenhagen, San Jose, Rio de Janeiro, and elsewhere.

Despite my initial skepticism, I had been won over by Henderson's sensible ideas. Then she told us about a poem she had written the month before called "Cyber Space Is Sacred Space."

again broke into applause—this time it seemed almost as a reproach to my heartless, overly intellectual attitude.

The tears came in the next paper, also on The House I Live In, by Joe Dorinson, a warm, white-haired professor who is chair of the history department at Long Island University's Brooklyn campus. Sinatra, he reported, told Edward R. Murrow he was prouder of The House I Live In than his fabled performance in From Here to Eternity. In his conclusion, Dorinson took a more personal note: "I was the kid on that ledge in The House I Live In," he said, and began sobbing quietly. The audience became completely silent as he continued: "That was me, and it was Mike D'Innocenzo"—the moderator of our panel and a professor of history at Hofstra—"and Len Mustazza," another of the speakers, an associate dean and professor of English and American studies at Penn State at Abington. Then he gave up and said, "I guess this is just very personal for me." That was pretty much the end of his talk. I couldn't help joining the stormy applause—considerably more than I had gotten for my coldhearted analysis. But the fans were happy—they got the video, they got the tears. Now it was time for the next session.

Sinatra's alleged Mafia ties were not the subject of any paper—hardly a surprise, given that the Sinatra family lent their support to the conference organizers. And when one speaker commented in passing that, "for a lot of people in the '60s and '70s, Sinatra represented the Mafia and organized crime," outraged voices in the audience shouted, "That's not proven!" (Although the Sinatra FBI file made lurid headlines when it was released in December, in fact it confirmed the family position that the Bureau had no hard evidence of any criminal activities.)

Other panels provoked more audience dissent. Keir Keightley, a postdoctoral fellow at the University of Strathclyde in Glasgow and author of the forthcoming Sinatra's Capitol: Celebrity, Masculinity, and Taste 1954–62 (Duke), discussed the construction of masculinity in the 1950s as seen in Sinatra's 1958 film Some Came Running. The film opens with Sinatra waking up on a bus, searching his pants pockets in a panic over the loss of something; what's missing, Keightley argued, was "not just his wallet." The scene provides a "vignette of 1950s' masculinity in crisis." Masculinity had been unproblematic on the battlefields of World War II, but the 1950s organization man, forced to conform to mass society, faced a crisis of masculinity. The members of Sinatra's Rat Pack were adult delinquents offering a critique of corporate conformity. Men could identify with Sinatra's rebellious persona on film, finding compensation for the constraints they experienced in their lives. As The New Republic said in the late 1950s, "Sinatra is not nice," and that was a crucial part of his appeal. But although Sinatra embodied masculine rebellion against the gray-flannel rat race, he ended up chairman of the board.

Audience members were puzzled by the paper. "You're just talking about his image," one former bobby-soxer said. "I'd like to know what he really thought. Did he really know he was doing all these things, or was he just the product of his culture?" The panelists were unprepared for naive questions like these and struggled to respond.

A later panel, "Sinatra and the Culture of the '50s," sounded promising. At SACRED SPACE was what the Spanish Hall resembled the next morning, with the Chief Rabbi of Israel, a representative of the Grand Sheikh of Al Azhar, and a bishop representing the World Council of Churches gathered onstage to discuss, among other things, the spiritual and ethical dimensions of contemporary civilization. But perhaps the most commanding moral presence was Adam Michnik, the former Polish dissident and current editor-in-chief of the daily Gazeta Wyborcza.

Michnik and Havel present some interesting contrasts. Both were leaders of the intellectual opposition to eastern European communism, but Michnik has elected to stay out of Poland's postcommunist governments, preferring the role of independent critic and press lord. For both men, as for many eastern European intellectuals of their generation, the pursuit of truth and justice involved the consumption of large quantities of alcohol and tobacco. But Michnik has so far been spared the health problems that currently threaten Havel's life.

In his speech, Michnik did Singh one better in the search for positive aspects of globalization: "Yes, we see the same advertisements, movies, and toothpaste the world round, but we also have the same road signs, thank God."

Generally, continued Michnik, there are two models for globalization: the aggressive Soviet aggregate, and the American melting pot. He would like to propose a third: "Prague globalization," named for a city of different languages and cultures, a city of Czechs, Jews,

Austrians, and refugees. "The secret of this wonderful, magical city is like King Midas. Maybe Prague has that same power. It has peace, tolerance, hospitality...and Havel."

Michnik's statement is true. But it is also, in many ways, a joke: If there is an opposite of peaceful, tolerant society, it is in the history of Bohemia in the last century. Czechoslovakia was created at the end of World War I to fend off its aggressive neighbors, but the Nazis got rid of the Jews, the communists expelled the Germans, the Slovaks divorced the Czechs, and the Velveteers carried out lustration, the ritual purging of any communists from positions of influence after 1989. Never mind the defenestrations.

ON Wednesday evening, the conference ended much as it had begun. Dagmar arrived; the absentee panelists returned; and a few more cameras flashed as the closing addresses began. Jirí Musil thanked Adam Michnik for coining the term "Prague globalization," and told us what he found missing at this forum that he would like to see discussed at the next: "the role of artists and scientists, popular culture, the social psychologies of multi-identities, and the globalization of crime."

Havel thanked the participants, the organizers, and the sponsors. "This forum is a space for reflection, a space for dialogue," he offered. "It would be good if the friendship you established here would bear fruit." He told us, "I am glad that you enjoyed your stay in Prague, that you found Prague a suitable site for this meeting. Prague will continue to be an open city suitable for this kind of dialogue." And off he walked, toward the sea.

The end of the event felt inconclusive; I found myself wishing they'd given us a parting gift, maybe a tote bag. I really didn't know what to take away from the conference, except for a new appreciation for motorboat racing and a sense that it's better to have these kinds of gatherings than not, especially when the guest lists are drawn up by the likes of Václav Havel. It's easy to criticize Havel's imperfections and his propensity for lofty abstraction, but I still want to squeeze every drop of his wry, inclusive decency while I can.

Jen Nessel's work has appeared in The New York Times, The Nation, and Self magazine.

the lectern, Roger Gilbert, an associate professor of English at Cornell and author of a book on modern American poetry, was proposing an "alternative Rat Pack" in which Sinatra was connected to J.D. Salinger and Albert Camus. Each of these men expressed "profound anxiety over the place of the individual in the world"; in the work of each, "emotional chiaroscuro becomes focused." (I worried about this latter claim: Can chiaroscuro become focused?) But Gilbert didn't stop there. James Stewart as Scotty in Vertigo "bears direct comparison to Frank Sinatra.... Scotty is in love with an image—the very embodiment of Sinatra singing 'Angel Eyes.'" And then there is also Jackson Pollock, whose "jittery hyperactive energy has much in common with Sinatra's up-tempo albums." And there's Mark Rothko, whose "contemplative and tragic work has resonance with the womblike immersion in erotic pain found in Sinatra ballads." And Miles Davis's Kind of Blue is "a concept album indebted to 'Only the Lonely.'" At this point I fled the room.

Down the hall was a session called "Frank Sinatra and Italian-American Culture." As I entered the room, Pellegrino D'Acierno, a professor of comparative literature and languages at Hofstra, was arguing that Sinatra provides "the master identity narrative of Italian Americans—the amorous persona and congenial self of legend." But back in the 1930, when young Sinatra was advised by Harry James to change his name to Frankie Satin, Sinatra became a victim of "nomenclatural stigmatization." I fled.

ACCORDING TO ONE SPEAKER, WHEN HARRY JAMES ADVISED HIM TO CHANGE HIS NAME TO "FRANKIE SATIN," SINATRA BECAME A VICTIM OF "NOMENCLATURAL STIGMATIZATION."

Fortunately, I had found Elizabeth Liebman, whose paper had the enticing title "'All of Me': The Cartesian Soul of Frank Sinatra." Despite a smattering of cultural studies jargon, it was the most eloquent presentation at the conference. She's a graduate student at the University of Chicago currently on a fellowship at the Getty Research Institute.

Her thesis was that Sinatra's achievements "are in the realm of the technical and corporeal—the mechanical replication of contagious passion." But doesn't this emphasis on the mechanical miss Sinatra's intimate conversational phrasing, his engaging song-stories, his great word consciousness? No, she said, insisting that "he communicated passion in sound," sound that was captured by the newly invented microphone, "breath materialized in the grooves of a disk." The microphone is the key, because it "enhanced Sinatra's vocal range and dynamic on the side of the soft and low, the hushed place on the acoustical scale where the swoon resides." The Sinatra canon "is a canon of passion," she concluded, but "the truth of Sinatra's emotional intimacy existed in the proximity effect of the microphone. It was mechanical knowledge that he had all along, that he trained and trusted."

One audience member objected that Sinatra's passion was not mechanical, it was real. "Honesty is a claim often made on behalf of Sinatra," Liebman said, "but unmediated passion makes uninteresting art."

But, someone else said, aren't you saying that he was just a machine? "He was one of the best machines in the world," she replied. Finally the audience was satisfied—and so was I.

DID A CORNELL NUTRITIONIST STEAL HIS STUDENT'S MEAL TICKET?

BY KATHARINE DAVIS FISHMAN

PRODUCED BY UNZ.ORG
ELECTRONIC REPRODUCTION PROHIBITED

FOR SOME TWENTY-FIVE YEARS, THE Rongovian Embassy—or the Rongo, as it's locally known—has been serving town and gown in Trumansburg, New York, a community not far from Cornell University. It dishes up the ingredients of college-town conviviality as accumulated over several generations: Mexican dishes and pizza itemized on psychedelically lettered signs and drinks with such names as Rongo Rum Punch and the Bastard. Like the place, the woman and man who sat nursing their beers in a rear booth for three hours one October night in 1994 looked almost frozen in time: she, a round, rosy woman with long white hair, wearing a prairie dress and shawl; he, a slightly built, slightly wrinkled man in a flannel shirt and faded jeans frayed at the knee.

The pair were Antonia Demas, a forty-three-year-old doctoral candidate in the Cornell agriculture school, and David Levitsky, a fifty-one-year-old professor of nutrition and psychology whose flamboyant lecture style—which included stripping down to his briefs to discuss body mass—had recently earned him an undergraduate teaching award. His conversation with Demas, however, was not going well.

Levitsky needed her help: He wanted to win a federal grant to extend the unusual study Demas had devised for her dissertation. But she was wary of helping him unless she was sure she would get payment—and credit—for her labor. By the end of the evening, Levitsky remembers, the conversation had grown "very acrimonious." Demas recalls Levitsky swearing at her—and even threatening to block her degree.

As it turned out, the argument that simmered between the two that evening was only a pale foreshadowing of the nastiness that was to follow: Demas says Levitsky stole her ideas, abused her trust, exploited her skills, and dumped her from her own project; he says the work was a joint effort and that she was defaming him. Even now, after years of mutual recriminations, legal consultations, internal investigations, and committee reports, the Demas affair leaves several troubling questions unresolved: In an academic setting in which mentorship and collaboration between professors and students are formally encouraged, how should universities decide who owns an idea? When mentors benefit from graduate students' work, are they stealing intellectual property or engaging in what one Cornell administrator called "permissible academic entrepreneurial behavior"?

Cases of academic misconduct—what the National Academy of Sciences calls "fabrication, falsification, or plagiarism in proposing, or reporting research" or "questionable research practices, such as keeping poor research records or permitting honorary authorship"—have received much publicity in recent years. A 1993 article in American Scientist revealed that nearly half the doctoral students and faculty in four disciplines had witnessed research misconduct. Recently, the University of Michigan was required to pay some $1.6 million to a graduate student whose professors stole her data and claimed authorship of her work. But definitions of—and punishment for—misconduct vary widely from school to school.

The tale of Demas, Levitsky, and the university's eventual rulings on their case illustrates both the ambiguities of intellectual-property ownership and the vulnerability of graduate students. It is also a particularly Cornellian story. A mixture of populist pride and parvenu defensiveness marks the self-image of the only Ivy League campus with an agricultural school. In fact, the university owes its existence to that school: The impetus for Cornell's founding in 1865 was the Morrill Act, which granted each state land for an agricultural college. Ezra Cornell, a rich businessman and farmer, kicked in half a million dollars to site that college within a university to be built on his Ithaca farm—an ultraprogressive institution that would also embrace the humanities and would be secular, coed, interracial, and open to rich and poor. The result has been an oddly eclectic culture: Today an undergraduate may study semiotics and swine breeding in the same semester.

Even by Cornell's standards, however, there was nothing usual about Antonia Demas. While most students come to graduate school with a vague interest in some academic subject and depend on professorial mentors to shape their research, Demas arrived a middle-aged woman with a plan all worked out. Since the early 1970s, when she was an undergraduate studying nutrition education at Goddard College in Vermont, Demas had been thinking of ways to blend progressive pedagogy with sound nutrition. Perhaps the most imaginative class in her varied repertoire was called the Bog Men's Last Meal, in which she taught children how archaeologists analyzed the stomach contents of prehistoric bodies preserved in the peat bogs of northern Europe. From the archaeologists' report, Demas devised a recipe for barley bread, which she had the children cook up, hoping they would learn in the process something about carbon dating, Iron Age tools, the seasonal availability of grains and plants, and the use of a microscope.

She had been teaching classes like this for years, to students from kindergarten through graduate school, to kids in Head Start programs, and to old people in senior centers. Mostly, however, she had been a volunteer. By 1987, when she began working toward a master's degree, Demas knew both that her teaching method worked and that she could not take it further unless she had a Ph.D. and could back up her theory with data from a controlled study. In particular, she wanted to show that children would choose healthy, low-fat ethnic foods in the school cafeteria if they had studied the cultures and cooked the recipes in class. By joining the classroom to the lunchroom, Demas hoped to make healthy but unfamiliar foods palatable to kids and to advance the cause of multicultural education.

Demas's plans distinguished her from her peers in another way. Many graduate students secure teaching or research fellowships to cover their tuition. Had Demas chosen to pursue her degree in the Division of Nutritional Sciences (where Levitsky worked), she might have obtained such a fellowship; but the nutritionists, Demas found, addressed food through its chemical components and could not accommodate her anthropological approach. The right place for her curriculum was the education department in the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences (ALS). The department had no money to fund graduate students, but Demas was sufficiently single-minded, stubborn, and determined to pay tuition fees—which edged up toward $9,000 annually—in order to do things her way. She took out bank loans, and by the time of the showdown with Levitsky in the Rongo, she had accumulated a substantial debt.

Demas began her dissertation work by assembling a committee of three faculty advisers. Committees are often departmental hybrids, but Demas's, reflecting the plan she came in with, was more hybrid than most. Indeed, her advisers had never met one another before she brought them together. Serving as chair was Joän Roos Egner, a former associate provost at Cornell and a professor of education. In addition, there was Robert Ascher, an anthropologist who made ethnographic films, and T. Colin Campbell, a distinguished nutritional biochemist and director of a long-term dietary study of families in 130 Chinese villages.

In August 1991, Demas walked into her advisers' offices and told them she wanted to try out a multicultural food curriculum in the elementary school in rural Trumansburg, her hometown. By creating ethnic dishes in the classroom, she hoped to make them more palatable in the lunchroom. Trumansburg was perhaps a perfect test case for the introduction of ethnic foods because of its lack of cultural diversity: Ethnically and gastronomically, the school was white-bread. Access was easily arranged; several of the teachers were Demas's neighbors, and she had been a school volunteer for years. By the fall of 1992, Demas was meeting regularly with her advisers to discuss research strategies. Ascher had her read articles on food around the world and on the ethnography of education. They also talked about experimental design. Ascher emphasizes how elementary this part was. Would the children who got the curriculum eat more of the ethnic dishes later served in the cafeteria than the children who didn't get it? "You weigh the food before the kid eats it, and then you weigh the food before the kid throws it away. That's it," he says.

Demas also met with Campbell to discuss nutrition. Since she had some interest in prejudices against particular foods, he suggested a talk with his colleague, David Levitsky, who had a background in psychology.

Levitsky's field was obesity, and he immediately saw promise in Demas's project: He knew that school lunches provided by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) derived 45 percent of their calories from fat, though the recommended daily allowance (RDA) was 30 percent. "There was a mandate by the USDA to reduce the fat to accepted levels," he says. But American adults and children were stubbornly attached to fatty foods. Accordingly, the agency would be likely to fund research that shed light on how to meet this goal. "That's about the time Antonia came in and told me what she was doing, and I said, 'Wow, this could be a technique.'"

Demas, however, was skeptical of Levitsky's hopes: She doubted that her curriculum would be useful to dieters. "He seemed to think obesity levels would be affected, which sounded far-fetched to me because the kids were getting the ethnic food as side dishes," she says. "But I agreed to let him add an obesity measure—to weigh the kids as well as the food—if the principal approved."

During the summer of 1993, Demas met frequently with the Trumansburg teachers. Levitsky visited the school for an hour that summer to lecture the teachers on nutrition; in the fall, he delivered a second lecture to the parents. He sent over seven of his students to serve in the corps of volunteers helping to cook dishes in the classrooms and weigh food in the lunchroom. Thoroughly engaged by the project, he was now actively seeking to join Demas's committee as an adviser.

"There's a certain naïveté about Antonia," Ascher says. "One day, she said she met this guy Levitsky and he wants to work with her. He sounded awfully anxious. Why? I'd never heard anything like it, a professor so intensely interested in a student's research and wanting to get in." Reluctantly, Demas's committee agreed to let Levitsky come on board, but only after Demas passed her A exam (comprehensives).

At this point, Demas's and Levitsky's accounts diverge. Both claim to have designed the quantitative side of the Trumansburg study. At the end of the school year, in June of 1993, Demas says she consulted Cornell's Office of Computing and Statistical Consulting, a service provided for students, which designed the system for entering the data she collected. Levitsky also claims to have consulted a Cornell statistician and to have devised a method for analyzing Demas's findings. "Experimental design is my forte," he says, "Hers is the classroom." About the implementation of the study at Trumansburg that fall, both parties agree. After each new food was introduced in the lunchroom, Demas and the statisticians analyzed the consumption data and sent it out to the faculty committee, the teachers, the principal, the volunteers, and the cafeteria staff. But Levitsky wouldn't wait for the hard copy; he had Demas send him immediate e-mails.

In October, Demas passed her A exam, and Levitsky joined her committee.

The project was wildly successful. The recipes, devised by Demas and named by the children, used free USDA commodity foods and exotic greens—dandelions, rapini, kale—that Demas persuaded local markets to order for her. Every other week, Demas was in school briskly wheeling around a cart full of foods: collard greens for Soul Stew, jalapeños and chocolate for mole sauce, chickpeas and raisins for couscous. "What she accomplished in fifty minutes!" says Ruth Kahn, a volunteer. "She came with a map, she showed the kids where these foods were grown, they copied down the recipes in their journals, and then they proceeded to cut up the food, cook it, sit down and eat it, clean up, and compost what wasn't eaten. I can see them all sitting around in a circle like little rabbits, chewing the greens."

The study had all the earmarks of a hot project. With Campbell and Egner's help, Demas began to get lecture bookings. In December 1993, Egner arranged for her to testify at public hearings held by the Departments of Agriculture and Education on the school lunch program. USDA officials expressed interest in Demas's work and encouraged her to apply for an agency grant. Enthusiasm for healthier school lunches was at a peak. Twenty-five million children were fed by the USDA; another twenty-five million brought their own lunches but were considered potential cafeteria customers. Every possible food supplier wanted a piece of the action. It would be prestigious for Cornell—not to mention the professor in charge of the research—to define the direction of the school lunch program. Imagine a healthy, multicultural food curriculum for kindergarten through twelfth grade called the Cornell Model, complete with product tie-ins!

In the spring of 1994, Demas won two national awards: the Society for Nutrition Education's award for "Excellence in Nutrition Education," and the USDA's award for "Most Creative Implementation of the Dietary Guidelines." She requested that both organizations put sixty names on each award, including those of the principal, the teachers, the cafeteria workers, the volunteers, and the janitor. Among the sixty names was that of David Levitsky, who now lists these prizes on his vita.

And that's when things started going wrong. One day, Levitsky and Demas gave a seminar to Cornell Cooperative Extension, a unit of the agricultural school that teaches courses in family nutrition and environmental subjects to farmers, businesspeople, and other community members. "I left that seminar a little uneasy," Colin Campbell says. "I felt he was too much the star of the show. Somebody would ask a question and he would say, 'Oh, I'll answer that.' I didn't expect it."

Then Demas began to hear rumors that Levitsky was claiming sole authorship of the project. Today, Levitsky says he "probably" lectured about the study to professional and community groups outside Ithaca. "I am a very enthusiastic researcher," he says. "I was very excited about these ideas." When Marian Burros, a food reporter for The New York Times, learned about the project, she called Levitsky, not Demas or Egner, and asked to visit Trumansburg. So Burros came to town, and Levitsky paid the elementary school what Demas, the principal, and a teacher say was only his third visit. (Levitsky says he had made many earlier visits.) Burros watched Demas teach classes, but the resulting article conveyed the not unreasonable assumption that Levitsky was in charge of the project and Demas merely a helpful graduate student. Recognition in The New York Times added a luster that no scientific journal, particularly in the field of nutrition, could provide.

Disgruntled, Demas nevertheless resolved to persevere. She had two tasks when the school year ended: to write her dissertation, and to pursue leads for a USDA grant. More idealist than careerist—she dedicated her thesis to "women, children, and food"—Demas believed that a federal grant in her name would guarantee her a serious reception wherever she went after leaving Cornell: "It was my ticket to gain visibility for the work." She requested permission to apply for the grant from Cutberto Garza, the director of the Division of Nutritional Sciences. Garza said she would need a senior faculty member to serve as principal investigator, and suggested Levitsky. The professor was eager to sign on.

Today, Levitsky says he was motivated largely by a desire to help Demas advance her career. "I would not have applied for the grant had I not wanted to work with her on it," he explains. "I just saw this as a perfect opportunity for her. It would give her a position here. She would have an office. She could get to know the staff. My hope was that she could eventually work her way in because I thought she would have a lot to offer." In spite, or because, of his interest in promoting Demas and her work, Levitsky brought his own ideas enthusiastically to bear on the grant application. He suggested they propose serving the ethnic foods as entrées rather than side dishes. He also sought to test the theory without its guru. "Antonia is a fantastic teacher in the classroom. She gets the kids' attention," he explains. "The whole thing could be an Antonia effect." Could they replicate the results outside Trumansburg—without Demas?

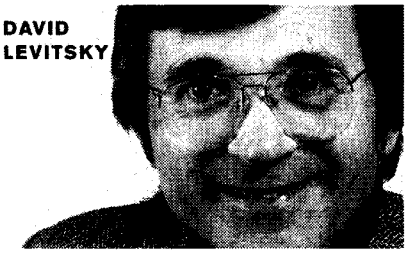
Demas became uneasy. "I was suspicious of Levitsky," she says. "He was taking over too much." She insisted that she be named co-principal on the grant application. Levitsky agreed, even though it is highly unusual for a graduate student to be a co-principal, a title that carries fiduciary responsibilities.

Levitsky was anxious to press ahead and arranged to conduct a second study in a school in rural Dundee. But when Levitsky asked Demas to help him, she startled him by insisting on being paid. "I told her that's not the practice in a university," Levitsky says. "There's no money to pay you when you're writing a grant. You're working to get the money." Most graduate students, of course, had fellowships to pay their way; Demas did not.

Once Demas began to assert herself, the situation quickly deteriorated. In September 1994, she finally appealed to Garza, who, she says, walked her down the hall to Levitsky's office to insist she be put on the division's payroll right away. Levitsky offered to pay her retroactively when the grant came through, but Garza said that was against the rules. At the end of the meeting, Demas thought that—as Garza had instructed—she was being put on the payroll. But soon she discovered she wasn't, and went on strike, canceling an important meeting in Dundee.

In early October, Levitsky sent her a long, apologetic e-mail, saying "I agree with Bert [Garza] that you should get fully compensated.... Your dreams are my dreams. I am on your side." But Demas still wasn't seeing any money. And that's how the two ended up arguing at the Rongo.

"I LISTENED TO LEVITSKY'S WORDS," EGNER WROTE, "AND I DECIDED HE WAS MORE A THREAT TO ANTONIA OFF THE COMMITTEE THAN ON."



DAVID LEVITSKY

There, Levitsky says, "I kept telling her about my vision that this project would get her a foot in the department and eventually a job.... She kept resisting me. It's like your child, when you know if they'd only do this it would work. It's very frustrating." So Levitsky lost his temper, and the last thing he said to Demas, in desperation, was that passing the dissertation defense was not automatic.

The next day, Demas called her advisers and told them Levitsky had threatened her. The professors were alarmed. Egner, the head of the dissertation committee, set up a meeting with Demas and Levitsky. According to an account of the meeting she wrote later, Egner asked Levitsky to resign from the committee. He became combative, and Egner decided it was best not to fight him. "I listened to his words," she wrote, "and I decided he was more a threat to Antonia off the Committee than on." It proved a fatal misjudgment.

Levitsky did not interfere with Demas's dissertation defense, and her degree was awarded in January 1995. The dissertation included a twenty-two-page bibliography, but only minimal references to

Surrealist Women
An International Anthology
Edited with introductions by Penelope Rosemont
Beginning in Paris in the 1920s, women poets, essayists, painters, and artists in other media have actively collaborated in defining and refining surrealism's basic project—achieving a higher, open, and dynamic consciousness, from which no aspect of the real or the imaginary is rejected. This anthology, the first of its kind in any language, displays the range and significance of women's contributions to surrealism. It includes nearly three hundred texts by ninety-seven women from twenty-eight countries.

The World of Nabokov's Stories
By Maxim D. Shrayer
A century after his birth, Vladimir Nabokov remains controversial, provocative, and "cool." Yet while he receives acclaim as a major American writer, few of his admirers in the West know the unique place he occupies in his native Russian tradition. In this comprehensive study of Nabokov's short fiction, Shrayer explores how Nabokov eclipsed the achievements of the great Russian masters of the short story, Anton Chekhov and Ivan Bunin, with whom he maintained a dialogic relationship even as he became—in exile from Russia and his native tradition—an American writer.

Introducing A New Quarterly Journal

Souls

A CRITICAL JOURNAL OF BLACK POLITICS, CULTURE, AND SOCIETY

Souls is a new quarterly interdisciplinary journal sponsored by the Institute for Research in African American Studies at Columbia University and published by Westview Press. The journal maps the intellectual contours of the contemporary black experience: the various ideological debates, politics, culture, and recent history of African American people. In the spirit of W.E.B. DuBois, Souls (whose title was inspired by DuBois's classic 1903 analysis of black American culture and politics, The Souls of Black Folk) presents creative and challenging interpretations of the major themes and issues currently being discussed by scholars of black America. Under the editorial direction of Manning Marable, Souls brings together intellectuals from both traditional academe and the black community to engage in a critical dialogue about contemporary problems and challenges facing black America today.

Levitsky's specialty, obesity. Indeed, Levitsky's plan to relate the study to his obesity research had gone absolutely nowhere: He hadn't even weighed the children. In mid-February, Demas began receiving checks; she assumed the money was coming from the USDA grant. But on February 14, as Demas was helping two Trumansburg teachers to register with the Division of Nutritional Science's payroll office, Levitsky appeared and announced that the USDA grant money had not yet come through but that "the check was in the mail." More than just embarrassing, this news aroused Demas's suspicion. Why was the grant taking so long to arrive? The next day, Demas asked a friend in the division's business office for a copy of the grant proposal. To her surprise, she learned that Levitsky had not sent it out until January 5. She was even more astonished to discover that the proposal listed no co-principal. In fact, Demas's name appeared nowhere on it, even though the description of the planned study—which ran barely more than three pages, with no citations or bibliography—was a digest of her dissertation, down to the recipes she had devised and the children had named. "I was stunned," she says. At the same time, she learned of other instances in which Levitsky had taken full credit for her study or hardly mentioned her name—two were in lectures given by Levitsky at Cornell.

Demas had had enough. She brought her plight to the attention of Cornell administrators. Caught between their obligation to enforce academic standards and their eagerness to avert a scandal, those administrators would spend much of the next two years attempting to split the difference—and satisfying no one.

In February 1995, Demas made her first visit to school officials: She took her materials to Richard G. Warner, the university ombudsman. An ombudsman is not a disciplinarian; his goal is to seek accommodation. Even so, Warner had strong words for Levitsky's conduct. His report, issued in April, described Levitsky's failure in five instances adequately to credit Demas as "quite inappropriate," "at best forgetful and at worse [sic] unkind," and "suggestive of a pattern." It seemed "clear to me that

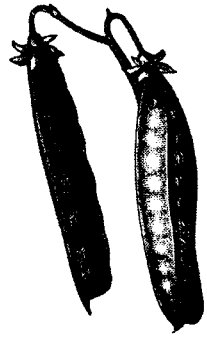
DEAN STEIN DECLARED THAT LEVITSKY'S USE OF DEMAS'S IDEAS WAS "WITHIN THE BOUNDARY OF PERMISSIBLE ACADEMIC ENTREPRENEURIAL BEHAVIOR."



David was 'less than candid' about the submission and acceptance of the proposal," he wrote. As for Demas's role in the Dundee project, Warner deemed it "unrealistic...that she should function as an 'employee of David's.'" Demas was largely pleased with the report; Levitsky was not. After several months of negotiations, the principals reached an agreement. Among other things, Levitsky would credit Demas as a consultant in published reports on Dundee and cite her work in all presentations. He would write a letter of clarification to the USDA about his grant proposal and a letter of apology to Demas. Finally, he would collaborate with her on a paper about Trumansburg that would be submitted to an academic journal.

As she and Levitsky attempted to sort out the implications of the ombudsman's report, Demas turned to training teachers in Trumansburg and Dundee for the USDA study. But there was still no grant money to pay those teachers. Garza and Levitsky decided to front the money through other sources, including another USDA grant at the division's disposal. But the new funding covered Dundee alone, not Trumansburg—which was eventually dropped altogether. Demas was angry and upset by the time she began training the Dundee teacher, Anne Meyer-Wilber. Nevertheless, she handed over her dissertation with the curriculum and informal lesson plans in it and instructions on gathering data. She held several training meetings in Dundee with the Cornell Cooperative Extension—whose staff was administering the project—the teacher, the cafeteria workers, and Levitsky, walking them through the cooking and weighing procedures.

Then Demas went off to Italy for two weeks on a speaking engagement. Upon her return in May, Levitsky told her that "the people in Dundee do not want to work with you anymore. Don't call them."

Demas says she was fired abruptly for no reason. Levitsky claims that Meyer-Wilber, the Cooperative Extension staff, and the people at Dundee had found her impossible to work with, unwilling to give them the curriculum and lesson plans, and that he and Demas had discussed this. A letter to Levitsky from the local director of the Cooperative Extension complains about Demas's failure to give "legitimate lesson plans" and complete other tasks expected of her, a charge Demas denies. The letter concludes by asserting that the Cooperative Extension staff could handle the project on its own, using Demas "as a resource when we need her."

When I called the Cooperative Extension to discuss Demas's case, the director said Cornell had forbidden her to talk to me. The Dundee teacher, Anne Meyer-Wilber, has proved impossible to locate. Nevertheless, at least one source contradicts Levitsky's account: The cook at the Dundee school remembers Demas as "a very pleasant and positive person." When suddenly she was no longer involved with the project, he recalls being told by "the teacher on the project or Cornell Co-op Extension" that Demas was working on something else. The school principal, who hardly knew Demas, credits her departure to "some internal problem with Cornell."

Meanwhile, the ombudsman's negotiated settlement was unraveling. Demas learned that Levitsky had presented her study at a conference—whose proceedings were published by Cornell—and a paragraph describing the study as Levitsky's appeared in a division newsletter. Once again, Demas had had enough. She had tried peaceful resolution. Now she would seek disciplinary action.

"I hate this kind of conflict," she says. "But this man was affecting my life and my career in such a negative way. I wanted for it to end."

Cornell University policy defines academic misconduct as "any act that violates the standards of integrity in the conduct of scholarly and scientific research and communication." Among the examples listed in the faculty handbook is "plagiarizing the work of others, i.e., intentionally or knowingly representing their words or ideas as one's own." Upon receiving a report of academic misconduct, the dean of the faculty normally has sixty days to conclude an inquiry; as a one-man grand jury, he can either dismiss the charges or refer them to the appropriate college dean for further investigation.

But after Demas deposited her grievance materials with Dean Peter Stein in October 1995, more than sixty days elapsed without a sign from his office. When she called him, he gruffly said Levitsky's behavior wasn't worth reporting. Eventually, however, after Demas hired a lawyer, threatened to sue Cornell, and sent a letter charging six counts of plagiarism, five of lying, and twelve of (nonsexual) harassment, Stein agreed to meet with her and—after considerable badgering—with her committee, which stood squarely behind her claims. Stein said he saw academic misconduct as applying only to scientific research, not, as it were, to civilian contexts. Egner read him the handbook definition, and Stein replied, "I ignore that."

On April 26, 1996, Stein released his report. In it, he explained at length his interpretation of university policy, which endorsed the narrowest possible definition of misconduct: It was "directed toward the single end of protecting the integrity of the abstract body of scholarship." And Stein believed that Levitsky's failure to give Demas credit occurred in contexts—a Rotary meeting, an undergraduate class, the division newsletter—that were not part of the scientific record. In particular, he declared, "Levitsky's preemption of Demas' ideas (i.e., the concept and the recipes) lies within the boundary of permissible academic entrepreneurial behavior and does not warrant further investigation." However, there was one allegation that Stein conceded might qualify as misconduct: In his USDA grant proposal, Levitsky had misstated the amount of "novel food" the control group ate. Stein suggested that the deans of the agriculture, human ecology, and graduate schools look into that mistake as well as Demas's twenty-two other allegations.

As the administration took up an investigation of the allegations, Demas and Levitsky were coming to another impasse. Not surprisingly, it was over the journal paper they were supposed to be writing together on Trumansburg. Demas hoped that having her name on a publication would advance her curriculum and her career. Unable to work together, Levitsky and Demas decided to write separate drafts. But neither wanted the other to get credit for the project. In May 1996, Levitsky wrote a letter to the Journal of Nutrition Education claiming that if Demas submitted a manuscript without listing him as co-author, its publication would be "a serious breech [sic] of my intellectual rights as a scientist and author" because "I helped design, evaluate, and interpret the results." On Egner's advice, Demas had indeed submitted her own paper, listing the statistician Yasamin DiCiccio and Joän Egner as co-authors. Six months later, the Journal wrote Garza asking him to arbitrate before the manuscript was sent out for peer review. Garza put together authorship criteria published by the National Academy of Sciences and asked Levitsky, Egner, and DiCiccio to tell him how they fulfilled these criteria.

The result was that Egner and DiCiccio removed their names, in order, they say, to reduce contention. Levitsky, too, abandoned his claim to authorship. "I withdrew because it became blatantly apparent that Antonia would not work with me to complete the paper," he says, somewhat disingenuously perhaps, since by this time their professional relationship had completely collapsed. Garza wrote the Journal a letter saying the withdrawals didn't reflect prejudice about the paper's quality or integrity but merely recognized Demas's "principal role in the study's conceptualization and design, collection, storage, and analysis of data, writing of the paper, and data interpretation...." The paper, now lacking the imprimatur of any senior collaborators, was—after a round of revisions—ultimately rejected, with criticisms of the unsophisticated data analysis and a "dated literature review."

Tensions ran higher and higher among the committee members. "I know very well the ability of Cornell to 'contain' serious problems that might cause unfavorable publicity. The lawyers know how to scare the Hell out of weak-kneed administrators who then protect, protect, protect," Colin Campbell wrote in one of several angry e-mails to Garza, who he believed should have intervened earlier to stop Levitsky. "The system is not just slow and cumbersome," Campbell reflected. "It just does not work unless some extraordinary pressure is brought to bear."

The case continued to wend its way through various deans' offices and special committees, who, though expressing concern for Demas's plight, failed to produce concrete results. (One assistant dean who initially had seemed sympathetic took the bizarre step of shredding all the copies of Demas's documents in her possession.) No sooner had Daryl Lund, the dean of the College of Agriculture, taken over the investigation than he received a letter from Levitsky threatening legal action.

On October 4, 1996, Dean Lund issued what would be Cornell University's final word on the case. For the most part, Lund found for Levitsky. True, he wrote, Levitsky "could have been more forthright in attributing the line of research, the conduct of the research, and the conclusions of the research directly to Dr. Demas" and "appears to have been insensitive and careless" in his lack of attribution, but these actions didn't constitute misconduct. Thus there was no reprimand on the record, but Levitsky would be required to submit future proposals and material for publication to Garza—a demeaning requirement for a professor—to ensure properacknowledgment of Demas's work. The rest of Lund's account mirrored Levitsky's arguments, most notably asserting that "there was just cause for removing Dr. Demas from the Dundee project." On the advice of counsel, Lund would not discuss his conclusions and says Demas's dismissal from Dundee was a confidential personnel matter.

With Lund's report, Demas and her committee had exhausted all avenues of recourse within the university. Moreover, shortly after Lund released his report the project suffered a fatal blow: The USDA terminated Levitsky's grant—a highly unusual occurrence—because his required progress reports were perfunctory and late and he was asking for more money to cover duties that weren't in the original agreement. Egner later obtained one of his progress reports: It looked like jottings rather than composed prose, and whoever typed it had not used Spellcheck. If it wasn't clear that Demas the graduate student was a sophisticated statistician, neither was it clear that Levitsky the tenured professor was a competent writer.

It is possible to argue that Cornell's final ruling in the case was in keeping with the academic culture of the hard sciences. A physics professor may head a laboratory of several hundred graduate students. If one comes up with a promising idea, the professor applies for a grant to study it and then awards the former student—by now a Ph.D.—a postdoctoral fellowship. Both student and professor usually publish the data in a joint paper. Dean Stein points out that science advances by scholars' building on one another's ideas—what he means by "permissible academic entrepreneurial behavior"—and curtailing this process would inhibit the progress of scientific knowledge. As for attribution, while "making false claims in a journal of scholarly record is a very serious offense," making them at a Rotary Club meeting is more like "what you say to a woman you're trying to impress," and not the business of universities.

Levitsky took the same position. "Antonia," he said, "has the concept that she worked on this all her life, she possesses it. And academia says once ideas are introduced in the marketplace

The Shape of the River

Long-Term Consequences of Considering Race in College and University Admissions

William G. Bowen and Derek Bok

"Written by two of the most respected figures in higher education, The Shape of the River offers to the public what has long been needed: a large dose of crucial, unvarnished fact about affirmative action. Mining new and sensitive information, Bowen and Bok present an analysis that is careful, clear, comprehensive, and, above all, candid. No work tells us nearly as much as this one about the social costs and benefits of affirmative action in our colleges and universities. A brilliant scholarly performance, The Shape of the River should be essential reading for anyone seeking a dependable guide through the morass of competing claims that obscure from public attention the questions that need to be posed and the answers that need to be assessed." —Randall Kennedy, Harvard Law School

"This important book is a calm, expert, analytical study of race-sensitive college admissions, and what happens afterwards. There is nothing else in the same league. It tells us many things we didn't know, because until now there was no way to know them. The deepest question is: can we make social policy in this area on the basis of fact and reason, or will it all dissolve in ideological certainty?" —Robert M. Solow, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Nobel Laureate in Economics

Long-Term Consequences of Considering Race in College and University Admissions

Across the country, in courts, classrooms, and the media, Americans are deeply divided over the use of race in admitting students to universities. Yet until now the debate over race and admissions has consisted mainly of clashing opinions, uninformed by hard evidence. This work, written by two of the country's most respected academic leaders, is intended to change that. It brings a wealth of empirical evidence to bear on how race-sensitive admissions policies actually work and what effects they have on students of different races.

The authors are the economist William G. Bowen, President of The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation and former President of Princeton University, and Derek Bok, former President of Harvard University and former Dean of the Harvard Law School. Bowen and Bok argue that we can pass an informed judgment on the wisdom of race-sensitive admissions only if we understand in detail the college careers and the subsequent lives of students—or, to use a metaphor they take from Mark Twain, if we learn the shape of the entire river. The heart of the book is thus an unprecedented study of the academic, employment, and personal histories of more than 45,000 students of all races who attended academically selective universities between the 1970s and the early 1990s.

The study reveals how much race-sensitive admissions increase the likelihood that blacks will be admitted to selective universities and demonstrates what effect the termination of these policies would have on the number of minority students at different kinds of selective institutions. The authors go on to determine how well black students have performed academically in comparison to their white classmates, what success they have had in their subsequent careers, and how actively they have participated in civic and community affairs. The authors also explore the views expressed by graduates of selective colleges about the value of their education and the contributions that a diverse student body has made to their capacity to live and work with people of other races.

In the final chapters, Bowen and Bok relate their findings to the current debate about the wisdom of race-sensitive admissions. They consider whether critics are correct in claiming that such policies harm their intended beneficiaries by forcing minority students to compete with academically superior classmates. They examine alternative policies that have been proposed to increase diversity without relying explicitly on race in the admissions process. They end by reflecting on the thorny question of whether the concept of "merit" is compatible with a deliberate effort to achieve a racially diverse student body.

Authoritative, powerfully argued, and elegantly written, this book is a landmark work in one of the most important debates in recent American history.

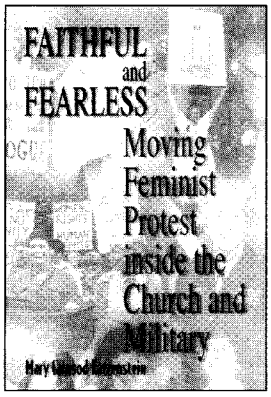
Faithful and Fearless

Moving Feminist Protest inside the Church and Military

Mary Fainsod Katzenstein



"This is the best work on where feminism really is in the United States in the 1990s. It is also the best work I know on the power of words."—Jane Mansbridge, John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University

Faithful and Fearless calls our attention to protest within institutions as a new stage in the history both of feminism and of social movements in America. The book is an inspiring account of strength in the face of adversity and a groundbreaking contribution to the study of American feminism, social protest, and the historical development of institutions in American society.

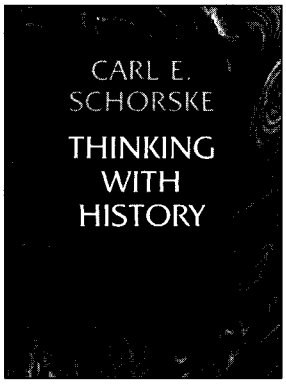
Thinking with History

Explorations in the Passage to Modernism

Carl E. Schorske



The distinguished historian Carl Schorske has drawn together a series of essays that reveal the changing place of history in nineteenth- and twentieth-century cultures. Schorske shows that the nineteenth century's attachment to thinking with history and the modernist way of thinking without history are different ways of trying to address the problems of modernity.

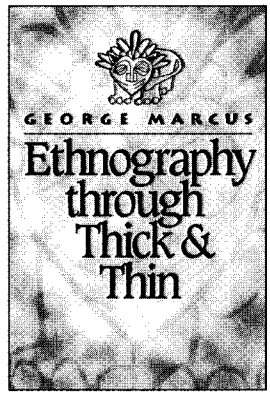
Ethnography through Thick and Thin

George E. Marcus



"This is an exceptionally significant contribution both to the field of anthropology and to broader discussions among scholars in a range of culture-focused fields. It is a very thoughtful, quirky, empirically compelling, and provocative work by one of the intellectual leaders in our field." —Don Brenneis, University of California, Santa Cruz

Marcus presents a series of penetrating and provocative essays on the changes that continue to sweep across anthropology. He examines, in particular, how the discipline's central practice of ethnography has been changed by "multi-sited" approaches to anthropology and how new research patterns are transforming anthropologists' careers. Marcus rejects the view, often expressed, that these changes are undermining anthropology. The combination of traditional ethnography with scholarly experimentation, he argues, will only make the discipline more lively and diverse.

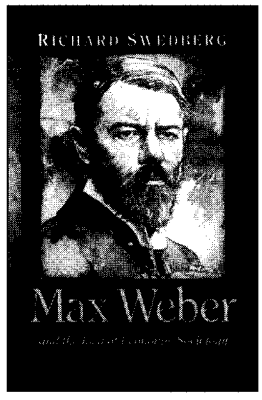
Richard Swedberg



"This book is unequivocally first-rate. Swedberg writes clearly, comprehensively, in a nuanced style, and with tremendous erudition."—Mark Perlman, University Professor Emeritus of Economics at the University of Pittsburgh and founding editor of The Journal of Economic Literature

While most people are familiar with The Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism, few know that during the last decade of his life Max Weber (1864–1920) also tried to develop a new way of analyzing economic phenomena, which he termed "economic sociology." Indeed, this effort occupies the central place in Weber's thought during the years just before his death. Richard Swedberg here offers a critical presentation and the first major study of this fascinating part of Weber's work.

In The Crooked Timber of Humanity he exposes the links between the ideas of the past and the social and political cataclysms of our present century: between the Platonic belief in absolute Truth and the lure of authoritarianism; between the eighteenth-century reactionary ideologue Joseph de Maistre and twentieth-century fascism; between the romanticism of Schiller and Byron and the militant—and sometimes genocidal—nationalism that convulses the modern world.

and developed in the institution they belong to everybody." Had Demas behaved, his statement suggests, she might have secured a position, a lab, and students of her own, whose ideas she in turn would be entitled to. "She blew it," Levitsky said.

It is possible, however, to look at the Demas case another way. "A university is here to nurture new ideas," says Robert Ascher. "We have a bunch of rules about ideas, and one of the basic rules is you credit other people with helping you conceive things, and you never claim ideas that are growing if in fact they're not your own. You never go out and get credit for things that are somebody else's work."

What does seem indisputable is that the Demas case consumed an inordinate amount of time and energy that might have been spent more productively on research or scholarship. Moreover, Cornell's efforts at damage control and image polishing have backfired, garnering unfavorable local press coverage, alienating active alums, and sparking an investigation (still in progress) by staff of the House Science Committee. "It's a model case for understanding the dynamic of a senior scholar stealing—and stealing is a strong word—the work of a junior colleague," says Dan Pearson, a Democratic staffer on the committee. He says a hearing on the case may be scheduled for as early as this spring.

If the Demas affair has not changed the working habits of many graduate students or their advisers, the lives of some of its principals have changed dramatically. Antonia Demas is now working with a handful of schools in different parts of the country who love the curriculum but can't afford to pay her: She is living at the poverty level. She seems—sadly, but not unreasonably—obsessed with getting justice and closure.

As for Cutberto Garza, he has just been appointed vice provost of Cornell. And David Levitsky is co-principal of a $507,000 NASA grant to devise healthy, appealing, plant-based menus for astronauts traveling to Mars.

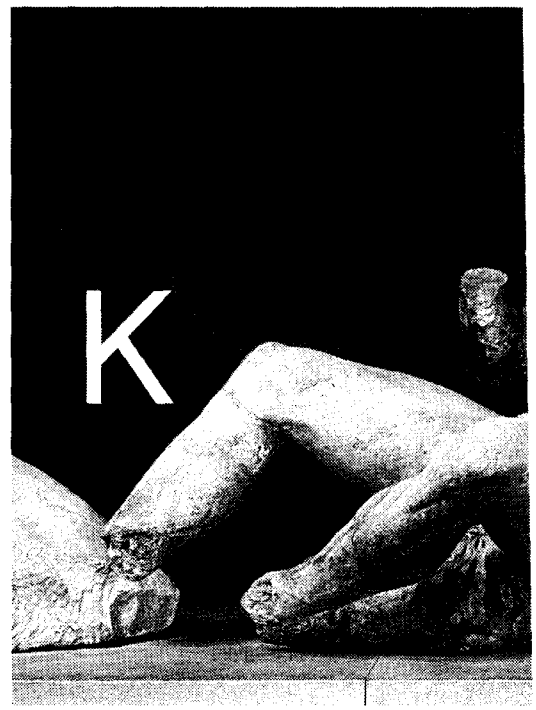
GREEK TO ME



HOW THE ELGIN MARBLES RUINED ENGLAND

BY LAWRENCE OSBORNE

WHEN I WAS A CHILD IN LONDON, excursions to the Elgin Marbles were as regular as visits to Madame Tussaud's. The friezes and pediment figures abducted from the Parthenon by the Scottish lord Elgin have been a national cultural shrine for almost two hundred years. At the British Museum, the galleries that house the marbles are as hushed and muted as a church—a sacred place of idealized civic virtues, where schoolboys like myself were supposed to forget all about conkers and Airfix models and the other pleasures of English boyhood and adjust our sights to that lofty educational tableau known as ancient Greece.

It was little mentioned that Elgin had obtained these stones from colonial Turkish authorities in Athens by means of bribes, threats, and semilegal permits. Look, we were told, there is the Horse of Selene, the archetype for all subsequent horses in Western art; there are the Beautiful Youths whom English schoolboys were once supposed to resemble; and there is the carved ox that inspired our very own Keats to write of "that heifer lowing at the skies." Before the age of ten, I was not even sure what nationality those gorgeous chitoned youths were. Etonian or Greek? Or something in between? I even used to wonder why there were no long-horned oxen in English fields.

SCULPTURES FROM THE PARTHENON

These fragments of the complex commissioned by Pericles in the fifth century B.C. are not just archaeological relics for the British. They mean something else altogether. By some perplexing chemistry, they have become icons of Britishness, a proof of English cultural virtue and historical depth. Rarely has colonial plunder struck such a chord. Consequently, they enmesh the English in all kinds of contradictory feelings: pride, guilt, haughtiness, duplicity, sentimentalism, and, last of all, a spectacular xenophobia—the latter, brazenly enough, usually directed against the Greeks, who periodically have the impertinence to demand the return of their property. The marbles lie close to the British heart, but they have hardly enlightened it.

Greeks themselves are often bemused by this hyperemotionalism regarding the Parthenon. Why, they ask innocently, if you feel so passionately about the marbles don't you give them back? That cry was raised most memorably in 1983 by Greece's then culture minister Melina Mercouri, who demanded that the marbles be at last returned to the "blue skies of Attica." Evangelos Venizelos, the current Greek culture minister, has renewed Mercouri's plea. "The Parthenon itself," he says, "demands its marbles back."

NOW THAT Britain has a prime minister who is eager to refurbish his country's image, one might think that the moment to return the marbles has finally come. Yet when public opinion polls conducted last September showed a majority of Britons wishing to see it done, a frenzy broke out among more conservative editorial writers. Hadn't the British done world culture a favor, they insisted, by taking the marbles away from those quasi-Asiatic Greeks, who had never shown interest in their own antiquity until tourism became a staple of their economy? Were the latter even true Greeks anyway? (From time to time over the last hundred years, British newspapers have taken to commenting on their suspiciously swarthy complexions, hairy legs, and low-slung behinds.) And if it hadn't been the inept semi-Greeks, wouldn't the Turks themselves have turned the sculptures into bullets or lime?

Prince Charles's November 1998 visit to Athens—his first in thirty-four years—unleashed a new round of breast-beating on Fleet Street, when both Venizelos, a socialist, and the mayor of Athens, a conservative, petitioned for the repatriation of the sculptures. What ignited the rage of the Tory press was not only that such demands were ill-mannered and insulting (as well as misdirected, since the Prince of Wales has no authority over the administration of the British Museum), but that they were presumptuous to the point of absurdity. "Anyone who truly loves Greece," thundered the Times, "must despair at the self-pitying, self-destructive campaign to take these extraordinary stones back to where they were once cut and away from where they have inspired the whole world." Even this backhanded acknowledgment of some link between the marbles and the modern nation of Greece was too generous for The Daily Telegraph, which declared: "We are all heirs to ancient Hellenic culture, not just Mr. Venizelos," as though the minister had demanded that the marbles be returned personally to him. And in a pointed admonition to the equivocating government of Tony Blair, the Telegraph warned that "no government in its senses would dream of entrusting the marbles to Mr. Venizelos." Culture Minister Chris

Smith seemed to agree: He declared that the marbles would remain in Bloomsbury indefinitely. After all, he argued with lucid moral force, "they are beautifully lit."

In fact, such pride was misplaced. The fulminations of the Tory press conveniently ignored a revelation, made a few months earlier, that, far from protecting the marbles, the British Museum has seriously damaged them. In an updated version of his 1967 book Lord Elgin and the Marbles, the historian William St. Clair disclosed that in 1938 the British Museum committed an egregious if inadvertent act of vandalism against the masterpieces of Phidias. Assuming that the stones must originally have been snow-white, a museum task force under Lord Duveen of Millbank, a museum benefactor with no expertise in ancient sculptures, had set about cleaning the surfaces with soapy water and blunt copper instruments.

Too late the cleaners realized their blunder. The original patina had been irrevocably marred and the mistake then concealed with a layer of brownish wax—and a large dose of ventriloquist British bureaucracy. "The damage cannot be exaggerated," a secret study committee concluded in 1938, while recommending that a public statement would not be necessary. Was it possible, then, that the British had done the sculptures more harm than two thousand years of Christian iconoclasts, Venetian shells, and Turkish vandalism put together? It was a humbling thought.

Yet St. Clair's revelation did not trouble the authorities at the British Museum. In a June 1998 interview with the Telegraph, the museum's curator of Greek and Roman antiquities, Ian Jenkins, offered a blithely mystical reason as to why the marbles should remain British. They have, he averred, put down deep roots in their new soil. Besides, he added, to disrupt such an august institution would be to "tear pages out of the encyclopedia of universal knowledge."

But that is not all. "The Marbles," Jenkins went on, "are the pictorial representation of England as a free society and the liberator of other peoples." What he means, presumably, is that these images of Athenian youths charging around on finely chiseled horses with their hair waving in the wind are, in fact, us. They might as well be playing a lazy game of cricket and eating crumpets under the skies of Attica. They are not Greeks but Anglo-Hellenes, which is to say hybrid creatures of our own imagining. And if the stolen loot inspired the English to struggle for liberty, and even to side with the Greeks in their war of independence, shouldn't the marbles remain in London as a token of Athens's gratitude?

The British, then, have absorbed the Parthenon completely into their collective unconscious, from which it cannot easily be dislodged. The question is whether this appropriation is anything more than a matter of imperial emotion or, even worse, pure kitsch. The British love to say that they are playing Greece to America's Rome, but deep down we are as unlike the Greeks—ancient or modern—as any people could be. Would the Greeks have been able to fathom our lush sentimentalism, our clouded sexuality, or our boisterous philistinism? And, when all is said and done, could we ourselves have ever created anything as physically refined as the Parthenon friezes?

By holding the marbles in perpetuity, we prove to ourselves that we are in the cultural first division. Not merely shopkeepers, but keepers of civilization's flame; not merely gunboat merchants and mechanical inventors, but industrial-age Athenians, Olympian demigods like those represented in the half-erased scenes of our booty.

THE SOURCE of our anxiety lies, in some measure, in the character of Lord Elgin himself. Thomas Bruce, seventh earl of Elgin (a direct descendant of Robert the Bruce), was unquestionably a brooding and distasteful figure. Half tragic, half comic, he was seen from the first as either a heroic preservationist and selfless patron of the arts or a duplicitous, parsimonious looter. Or merely—as Byron so infamously charged—a tightfisted Scot with syphilis.

This indecisive verdict is inscribed into the very ruins of the Parthenon itself, for high up on one of the fluted columns one finds the carved names of Elgin and his beautiful young wife, Mary, while a few feet away on the walls of the Erechtheum, someone has carved the words QUOD NON FECERUNT GOTI, HOC FECERUNT SCOTI (What the Goths didn't do, the Scots did). Byron, Elgin's most passionate adversary, devoted whole swaths of Childe Harold to mocking the despoiling earl, and in a tirade called The Curse of Minerva, he even absolved the English of guilt for the theft altogether, blaming it instead on our neighbors to the north, the niggardly denizens of "that bastard land" whom he called "Foul as their soil, and frigid as their snows." "Frown not on England," he ranted, "England owns him not." And here comes the rhyme: Athena, no! thy plunderer was a Scot.

Yet for all this disclaiming, there remains a dim recognition: Not only was

IT'S NOW BELIEVED THAT THE BRITISH MUSEUM SERIOUSLY DAMAGED THE ELGIN MARBLES.

Elgin definitely British, but he was almost exaggeratedly so. In fact, he is a caricature of the Briton abroad—highly educated, knowledgeable, a pedantic connoisseur, comically sure of his superiority over all other races, and a bit of a pampered lout. We see ourselves in him, alas, and we do not like what we see.

Born in 1766, Elgin was a bluff aristocrat with genuine antiquarian interests, a nobly complicated prose style, and a proclivity for schoolboyish vulgarity. Once when the Elgins were in Sicily visiting the consul Sir William Hamilton (with whom Elgin shared a passion for antiquities) and his notoriously seductive wife, Elgin leaned over to Mary during dinner and exclaimed, in admiration of the luscious and unfaithful Lady Hamilton, "What a whapper!" The style was the man. Years later, letters exchanged between Lady Elgin and one of her lovers revealed her disgust at Elgin's boorish ways. Yet when Elgin was appointed ambassador to the Sublime Porte at Constantinople in 1798, the couple seemed glamorously happy.

At the village of Yenishehr near Troy, on their first voyage to Constantinople, Elgin wrested permission from the local Turkish pasha to remove a pair of ancient stone seats at the entrance of a church. "At first," he recorded triumphantly, "the Greek priests wailed and tried to prevent the crewmen from taking away the seats, but when they realized I had received permission from the Capitan Pasha, they withdrew in tears." It was an ominous foretaste of things to come.

Soon Lord and Lady Elgin were traveling all around Greece and Turkey on a boat called the Narcissus and in overland mule trains, indulging Elgin's lust for antiquities. They took their two tiny children in tow, fired by a mutual passion for the ancient Greek world. Everywhere they went, they filched stones, sometimes in the face of strong Greek opposition. In 1801 Elgin arrived in Athens with a caravan of scholars and artists and the Reverend Philip Hunt. Chief among the entourage was the Italian artist Giovanni Battista Lusieri, whom Elgin had charged with the work of copying, surveying and finally removing the friezes and pedimental figures from the shattered temple. What happened next is at the core of all the deep ambivalence and guilt that the marbles still elicit.

Much has been made of the firmans, or official Ottoman permits, that Elgin used to get into the Acropolis and do as he wished. The main firman, signed by the grand vizier's deputy Seged Abdullah Kaymacam (the chief Turkish official in Athens), gives Elgin permission to erect scaffolds on the Temple of the Idols, as the Turks called it, and to make excavations. The key sentence then follows: "No one shall meddle with the scaffolding or implements, and if the said painters wish to take away any pieces of stone with old inscriptions, or sculptures therein, no opposition shall be made." The text was originally written in Italian; did "qualche pezzi di pietra" (some pieces of stone) refer to the entire decoration of the Parthenon? Most now concede that it almost certainly did not.

However, there is a revealing passage in one of Lusieri's letters to Elgin that suggests how business was done on the Acropolis that year:

> This meeting ended with promises from the Voivode that the Acropolis Hill would be open to all Englishmen from sunrise to dusk, and that your Lordship's artists should have access to all facilities without payment of any fee or bribe. Rev Hunt then presented the Voivode with brilliant cut-glass lusters and firearms, after which he asked the Voivode for an official firman, whose complete context I submit to your Lordship.

When Elgin arrived on the scene, he was equally ready to shower gifts of silks and horses to compliant Turkish officials, encouraging them either to turn a blind eye or to interpret the firmans with the greatest latitude. Yet for all this sly bribery, everything did not go smoothly on the site. For one thing, the Turks were not as indifferent to the Temple of the Idols as their British detractors had disingenuously supposed. For another, a lot of stuff got broken.

The scholar Edward Daniel Clarke, for example, witnessed the vandalism of Elgin's crew as they clumsily attempted to displace the metopes, smashing some of them as they lowered them on inadequate ropes. Most interesting, however, is Clarke's description of the Turkish outrage at this accident, arising, as he put it, "from the attachment the Turks entertained towards a building which they had been accustomed to regard with religious veneration." The Disdar (military governor), in particular, was enraged when he saw some of the sculptures being broken, and promptly burst into tears, crying poetically, "Telos!" (Enough, it's the end!).

Another traveler, Edward Dodwell, was equally disturbed by Elgin's high-handed rapine. "Instead of the picturesque beauty and high preservation in which I first saw it," he wrote of the denuded Parthenon lorded over by Lusieri, "it is now comparatively reduced to a state of shattered desolation." Even Lady Elgin was moved to write, "I do not recollect to have ever felt my heart throb with greater violence than when I saw this treasure detached from the entablature of the Parthenon and depending only on the strength of Ragusan cordage." But was this throbbing the result of threatened pride, noble anxiety, or outright shame? It is not clear. It may have been merely chagrin at the frailty of Ragusan cordage.

Further indignities, however, awaited the unfortunate marbles. One of Elgin's ships sank with all its cargo, and the stones had to be fished from the seabed; miraculously, they were all recovered. Even worse, though, was the fate of Elgin himself and many of his entourage. Lusieri stayed on in Athens for many years until dying horribly of a burst artery—the gleeful Greeks claimed that he was found in a pool of blood with a black cat perched on his chest. Elgin lost his nose (a result of syphilis), shattering his self-esteem and providing Lord Byron with some cruelly personal ammunition. Having divorced his wife and then sold the marbles to a lukewarm government prepared to pay him only half the 75,000 pounds he had originally asked, Elgin lived the rest of his life running from his creditors and finally died in poverty in Paris in 1841. Lady Elgin also died miserably, buried in a grave that remained unmarked until 1916.

WHAT, though, of the claim made by Elgin and by many others since that the acquisition of the marbles would lead to a

A NOTE FROM THE NEW PRESS

Due to an editing error, a passage in The Cold War and the University: Toward an Intellectual History of the Cold War Years (The New Press, 1997) incorrectly suggested that Dr. Eric Wolf purloined documents. For the record, Dr. Wolf did not purloin any documents. The passage, on page 124 of the book, should read: "The committee on ethics invited anthropologists to help build a file of anonymous cases. At this point, the Student Mobilization Committee (on the war in Vietnam) sent an ethics committee member, Eric Wolf, purloined documents from the files of Michael Moerman at UCLA..." The New Press deeply regrets the error.

sparkling British Renaissance, a heroic breed of classically inspired artists flourishing in their hundreds in Tooting Bec and Primrose Hill? Elgin had been fired by this conviction even before leaving Britain—according to Theodore Vrettos, in The Elgin Affair (an updated version, published in 1997, of his 1973 book Shadow of Magnitude). Inspired by the philhellene architect Thomas Harrison, who had helped him restore his ancestral home at Broomhall, Elgin, according to Vrettos, had an idealistic, if somewhat vague, urge:

> It was the opportunity he had long been seeking, the chance to restore the entire position of the fine arts in Britain and to improve British architecture, painting and sculpture. Moreover, classical designs could be used everywhere, even on furniture and household items, and consequently the embassy could very well benefit the advancement of the arts in England.

Furthermore, Elgin always claimed that he had rescued the Parthenon masterpieces from certain degradation by the "barbarous Turks." Later, when the authenticity of the marbles was challenged by the glibly opinionated connoisseur Richard Payne Knight (who claimed they were worthless Roman copies), Elgin called in the director of the Louvre, Ennio Visconti, to prove their provenance. This venerable expert was also moved to add:

> In their new situation, in the midst of an enlightened nation particularly disposed to afford encouragement to sculpture, the Elgin Marbles will rouse the talents of the young artist to exertion and will direct him in the road which leads to perfection in his art. We have only to regret that the noble idea which induced Lord Elgin to rescue them from the daily ravages of a barbarous nation was not entertained a century and a half earlier.

The British attitude toward future Greek claims on the marbles is encapsulated in a statement—possibly apocryphal—often attributed to Elgin himself: "The Greeks of today," he is supposed to have written, "do not deserve such wonderful works of antiquity." The implications were clear and, to most nineteenth-century Britons, untroubling: If the seizure of the Parthenon friezes could lead to an all-round improvement in the quality of British furniture, the act would be handsomely justified. And beyond that, as Felicia Dorothea Hemans pointed out in her heady poem of 1816, Modern Greece, there was the possibility of a Britannic Michelangelo arising from the spectacle of the happily relocated marbles:

> And who can tell how pure, how bright,
> a flame
> Caught from these models, may illumine
> the West?
>
> What British Angelo may rise to fame,
> On the free isle what beams of art may > rest?

In his 1987 book, The Elgin Marbles (reissued by Verso in 1997), the British journalist Christopher Hitchens attempted to assess these claims. It is true, he pointed out, that Benjamin Robert Haydon's superb drawings of the marbles had made their way to Goethe's house in Weimar, setting off something of a "Phidias effect" across Europe. Regency furniture and wallpaper did indeed get a considerable lift from the motifs and subjects of the friezes. The construction of a church in the shape of the Parthenon was even begun at Calton Hill in Edinburgh, though it was never finished. Parthenon motifs showed up all over the place: on the Athenaeum Club, on the Hyde Park Corner arch, on the walls of a thousand drawing rooms, and on the pediment of the Royal Mews at Buckingham Palace.

Besides this rich harvest of sublimity, there is Keats's double sonnet "On Seeing the Elgin Marbles." In addition, one might mention melancholy productions such as Hardy's "Christmas in the Elgin Room," which gives us some creaky rhymes and the spectral drama of the marbles practicing telepathy among themselves as they lament their fate. "Oh how sad," they cry, "now we are sold, We gods! for Borean people's gold." They lament the London weather, too, and the awful mixture of soot and Anglican church bells.

But aside from these lonely efforts, a British Renaissance never really came about. One wonders if the British are really inclined to neoclassicism after all. When the Houses of Parliament were rebuilt in the middle of the last century, the model of the Parthenon was an obvious one to follow. But the British chose instead to erect a pseudo-medieval Gothic whimsy. By contrast, the French—whose Chambre des Députés is a nice Greek temple—would have done wonders with the marbles. The marbles did, however, serve as an instructional panel for the Borean people's riding masters, who often brought in their pupils to imitate the postures of the Athenian youths. Many a society lady may have learned excellent saddle technique from the Elgin Marbles, but they inspired no English Michelangelo. Whether we like it or not, the national character in the end is more inclined to horses than to art, and the marbles could not change this fact. The Briton is far more an amateur equestrian than a user of chisels.

Elgin's "gift" to his nation, made when he needed some cash, is in a class with all the other paraphernalia that powerful northern European countries dragged from Turkey, Greece, and Egypt in the nineteenth century and used to deck out their spanking new capitals. The Kaiser dismantled and shipped off a whole temple at Pergamum; Heinrich Schliemann draped his wife with Helen of Troy's jewelry; the great winged Victory of Samothrace found its way to the Louvre; and the pedimental sculptures from the shrine of Aphaia Aegina

Pre-Columbian Art

Esther Pasztory

In the sixteenth century, when the Spanish conquistadors defeated the Aztec empire in Mexico and the Inca empire in Peru, they discovered not only treasure but a long tradition of sophisticated art from Mesoamerica and the Andes. In this beautifully written and illustrated book, Esther Pasztory surveys the art of these two areas, placing it within the historical and social contexts of these two cultural traditions. Drawing on a vast range of material, including monumental sculpture, woven textiles, pottery portrait heads, gold masks, and illustrated codices, Pasztory contrasts the human-centered art of Mesoamerica with the cosmic emphasis in the Andes. She reveals the effects of colonialism on the art, as well as the curious power that Pre-Columbian art has in turn exerted on Western art, both in the development of art theory and the creation of art works. By comparing and contrasting Andean and Mesoamerican traditions, using a wide variety of images, Pasztory is able to unlock some of the elaborate myths and belief systems that form part of their cultures.

Esther Pasztory is the Lisa and Bernard Selz professor in Pre-Columbian Art History and Archaeology at Columbia University and has written extensively on Pre-Columbian art and architecture. Among her books are Aztec Art and Teotihuacan: An Experiment in Living.

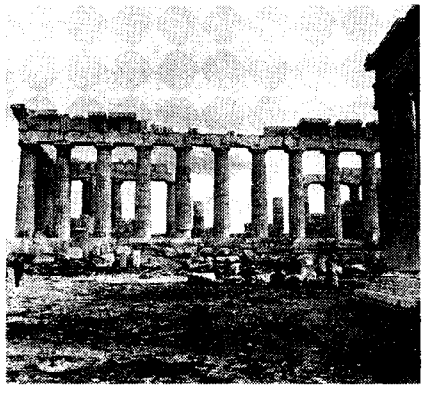
ended up in Munich. In an age deprived of mass tourism, these dislocations are widely credited with having fueled the neoclassic movement and with having shaped the taste of the entire nineteenth century, including—ironically enough—educated support for the cause of Greek independence in the 1820s. But it is a tendentious argument at best. In reality, as with Elgin himself, avarice, scholarship, bribery, and philanthropy were mixed into a single lurid endeavor, whose final aim was as much personal gain, self-adornment, and glory as it was the improvement of national taste. The marbles were like captured standards in the cultural sphere, an exquisite testament to power. In the end, Phidias launched little more than a thousand Regency wallpaper motifs and countless mad editorials.

It is true that Elgin was hardly alone, as he himself never tired of pointing out. If he hadn't been nimble on his feet, wouldn't his French archrival, the Comte de Choiseul-Gouffier, have beaten him to the draw and dragged the marbles to Paris instead? It is quite possible, though we will never know.



CORBIS-BETTMANN

AS LONG AGO as 1816, Hugh Hammersley, in a parliamentary debate over Elgin's actions, stated that "we should exert ourselves to wipe off the stain, and not place in our museum a monument to our disgrace." Unfortunately, his advice was ignored. Now Elgin's elderly descendant, the seventy-four-year-old current lord Elgin, has come to his maligned ancestor's defense. "He deserves a pat on the back," he snorts, pointing out that the unfortunate lord bankrupted himself for his country and the cause of art. Without Elgin, he claims rather dubiously, we wouldn't know about the glories of the Acropolis. We would still be rude Goths—or Scoths. "The whole thing is very sad," he says. Perhaps even the rare stuff of Greek tragedy?

It is true, of course, that were it not for Elgin all my youthful Sundays would have been of an entirely different nature. I might have become more of a virtuoso at conkers and Airfix models, or turned to Chinese calligraphy instead of ancient Greek. I am glad the marbles were there when I was a kid, though I never much liked "Ode on a Grecian Urn." It's just that it's time to send them back. The skies of Attica may now be filled with acid rain, but that is where Elgin's long-suffering imperial trophies belong. After all, they have outlived their uses as a riding manual, and I am glad to say that we have milked from them all the rhyming couplets we possibly can.

Feel like you're being dealt a bad hand?

With all the double dealing that goes on in Washington and Wall Street, the last thing you need is the double-talk that's doled out by the major media. There is one truly independent alternative. And that's The Nation, America's oldest and smartest weekly journal of fact and opinion.

Week after week, The Nation delivers the kind of deep-digging, straight-talking journalism that has all but disappeared from the American scene:

naming names without fear or favor, whether it's a top official of the CIA, a captain of industry, or the self-serving honcho of a leading environmental group;

pointing fingers at where the real corruption is originating these days — greedy, gift-addicted public officials...human rights-abusing dictators who are "good" for the American economy...the sanctimonious preachers of bigotry and division; and reaching conclusions often sharply at odds with "official sources" and the powers they shore up.

Gore Vidal, Katha Pollitt, Christopher Hitchens, Patricia Williams, Ralph Nader, Molly Ivins, Alexander Cockburn, Calvin Trillin, Susan Faludi, Katrina vanden Heuvel, and E.L. Doctorow are among the outspoken progressive voices you'll hear regularly in The Nation. Along with fresh, unjaundiced views on books and the arts.

To discover how good for your psyche The Nation can be, just mail the coupon below. It will bring you a full 6 months of The Nation –24 issues– for just $15.95, a savings of $44 off the newsstand price.

Send me 6 months of The Nation at the special introductory rate of just $15.95 — that's just 66¢ an issue (a savings of $1.84 on every issue).

TENURINGS AND HIRINGS TO TENURE, BY DISCIPLINE

THESE TABLES reflect approximately 2,700 tenurings and hirings to tenure effective as of the '98–'99 academic year. The listings cover the liberal arts and sciences at six hundred universities and four-year colleges in the United States and Canada.

The "Tenurings" column lists faculty members who have been tenured by their own institutions. The "Hirings to Tenure" column lists faculty members who are leaving one institution for a tenured position at another.

"N/A" means this information was not available at press time.

"[NTG]" means the institution is partially or completely non-tenure-granting, and faculty are listed when they are signed for the first time to a "non-probational" contract (e.g., lasting five years or more).

LINGUA FRANCA goes to great effort to insure that our data is accurate and as complete as possible. JOBTRACKS

JUNIOR HIRINGS, BY DISCIPLINE AND GRADUATE TRAINING

THESE TABLES reflect almost 5,000 first-time hirings to full-time junior positions effective as of the '98–'99 academic year. The listings cover the liberal arts and sciences at six hundred universities and four-year colleges in the United States and Canada. They should be read as follows: The institution in the third column hired the individual in the second column to a full-time junior position. (It may not be the first junior position the individual has held.) The individual received his or her graduate training at the institution in the first column.

Though most of these hirings involve multiyear, tenure-track contracts, some are for one-year positions only.

All information about hirings has been obtained either from the hiring institution or from the individuals concerned. Information about graduate training, however, has not in all cases been double-checked with the training institution. "N/A" means this information was not available at press time.

Where we have a campus reference (e.g., "Illinois, Urbana"), we use it. But institutions might also be listed under their general university name (e.g., "Illinois, U of").

LINGUA FRANCA goes to great effort to insure that our data is accurate and as complete as possible. However, we know that JOBTRACKS is, as we go to press, incomplete and still not free from all errors. Consequently, we cannot be responsible for errors and omissions, and readers are advised not to act on any of this information without verifying it.

HIRING INSTITUTIONS: If your institution is not fully represented, simply send us the name, title, and address of the person in your administration who, each August, can give us your new tenurings and hirings. We will send that person the appropriate form.

GRADUATE INSTITUTIONS: We will send you an early draft of our list so that you can add any graduate placements we have missed. Tell us the name, title, and address of the person in your graduate school who, each October, has the most complete list of your placements in the arts and sciences.

CONTACT US: Fax: 212-302-0847, attention: JOBTRACKS. Email: kittay@linguafranca.com. Subject line: JOBTRACKS.

terns of cognition.... Piper believed that shock tactics could force her interlocutors into rational reflection on their own racism."

I do not try to "force" viewers of my work to do anything; I do not believe in "racial shock treatment" or "shock tactics"; and I do not have an "aesthetic program." Many white viewers of my work are shocked by it because it confronts them with circumstances, images, and ideas with which they are unfamiliar and uncomfortable. However, the truths I try to depict are not news and not sources of discomfort to most members of the black audience—certainly not to most of those of my generation and older. In my experience, this familiarity with the issues frees most black viewers to explore a larger and more subtle range of ramifications of my work. By contrast, because many whites often feel themselves to be not in control of their reactions to my work, they shut down cognitively and emotionally and panic: They automatically assume that I am controlling them; they then infer that I must have intended to "shock" them; and they conclude that I have "forced" them into having those strong reactions as part of my "aesthetic program."

My work offers not only a multiplicity of angles and media, as Shatz notes, but a very great multiplicity of response options. Which ones a particular viewer expresses at a particular moment depends on the specifics of his or her experiences, background, and familiarity with the issues. I take my own responsibility as an artist to end with the initiation of a direct and immediate dialogue between my work and the viewer, by depicting the truth as I see it.

SOLIDARITY AND IRONY

When I first met Slavoj Zizek ["Enjoy Your Zizek!" October] at a conference two years ago, I asked him if he would be good enough to meet two students of mine who had accompanied me and who were interested in his work. The next morning, Professor Zizek spent more than two hours talking with those students. I think the recent article in Lingua Franca does serious injustice to one of the few truly generous academics I have known. Professor Zizek often speaks ironically. This is lost in the article, and a wrong impression is given. I hope you will be good enough to correct the record by publishing this letter.

The Newspaper Indian
Native American Identity in the Press, 1820-90
JOHN M. COWARD

A fascinating look at a nation and the power of its press. The Newspaper Indian is the first in-depth look at how nineteenth-century newspapers portrayed Native Americans, defining them by the norms of white society, and how that portrayal became part of our national consciousness. Coward looks at how Native Americans were represented (and misrepresented) in the media and shows how Americans turned native people into symbolic and ambiguous figures.

Behind the Burnt Cork Mask
Early Blackface Minstrelsy and Antebellum American Popular Culture
WILLIAM J. MAHAR

Blackface performers helped shape images of race, gender, and class in antebellum America. Through the songs, dances, jokes, parodies, spoofs, and skits, white performers satirized majority values without directly attacking them. The burnt cork masked these entertainers, shielding them from any personal identification with their material. An illuminating and timely addition to the national discussion on race and racial stereotypes.

October], I was surprised to see my colleague Ellen Kennedy referred to as "not primarily known as a theorist." Ellen teaches a wide range of courses in the history of political thought here at Penn, including courses devoted to nineteenth- and twentieth-century European political ideas. She has also published on French and German law and political philosophy and is a leading expert on the political thought of Carl Schmitt. Clearly her reputation as a political theorist helps explain why she was selected by Harvard to help with its assessment of the Berkowitz case.

FRIEND OF BILL

Why did Willis Regier leave the Johns Hopkins University Press? We still cannot understand it, even after Laura Secor's valiant effort to survey the nebulous internal political tensions that apparently led to Regier's resignation ["Without Explanation," Inside Publishing, October].

Having worked with Bill Regier over the past few years (as the translator of two books for Hopkins), I believe that I am in a good position to set the record straight on three key points. The first is the most pertinent: Never have I worked with a more professional, responsive, efficient, thorough, and congenial editor. I was so moved by his collaboration on The Myth of Quetzalcoatl (by Enrique Florescano) that I dedicated my translation to him. The second point is that Regier's good management extended to the press's finances: He produced, in July 1998, a fiscal year so good that for the book division it was "the best the press has ever had." This proves without a doubt that any risks Regier might have been taking through his active acquisitions were more than fully covered. Finally, the mystery surrounding Regier's departure is to a certain extent his own doing. Others in his situation might let loose with gossip and sad, sorry, interpersonal stories, but Regier is clearly a cut above: discreet, diplomatic, and fundamentally concerned with the bigger picture, in this case the reputation of our country's oldest university press.

Regier's directorship at the University of Illinois Press will thankfully allow the American academic reading public to profit from the recent loss incurred by Johns Hopkins.

In "Breaking Away" [Field Notes, November], we quoted Richard Ohmann as saying: "Since the 1980s, display ads have sought to connect large, historically shaped needs and desires...to specific consumer choices—a brand of cereal or toothpaste, or in this case a major in English or philosophy." In fact, Professor Ohmann wrote that advertisements have endeavored to perform this function since the 1890s.

Re-imagining Indigenous Cultures: The Pacific Islands

June 14–July 16, 1999

The Institute program focuses on the cultural and political formations of indigenous identities in the Pacific. Lectures and discussion will take up these issues through consideration of the history and politics of intercultural entanglement in the Pacific. The Institute is offered for scholars new to Pacific studies as well as for those interested to expand their work in new directions.

Institute faculty include Epeli Hau'ofa (University of the South Pacific), Margaret Jolly (Australian National University), Lamont Lindstrom (University of Tulsa), and Gananath Obeyesekere (Princeton University).

Participants will receive a stipend of $3,250 provided by NEH.

In keeping with the NEH guidelines, participation is limited to full-time faculty at colleges and universities in the United States. Applicants must be U.S citizens or have taught in the U.S. full-time for a minimum of three years.

Application deadline: March 1, 1999

FELLOWSHIP FELLOWSHIP

Rockefeller Resident Fellowship

The Transnational South Project, sponsored by the University Center for International Studies (UCIS) at UNC-CH and supported by the Rockefeller Resident Fellowship Program, addresses social and cultural changes associated with globalization and economic restructuring in the southern United States due to new flows of people and capital between the southern U.S. and Mexico, Central America, the Caribbean, and elsewhere. UCIS invites applications from scholars with Ph.D. degrees in the humanities and social sciences, and from non-academic practitioners and artists, to be Resident Fellows at UCIS for the academic year 1999-2000.

Resident Fellows will contribute to the core seminar and, at their choice, to other seminars and workshops at UNC-CH and in the Research Triangle area. UCIS will provide Resident Fellows with a stipend of approximately $30,000 plus partial assistance with relocation expenses.

To apply for this Fellowship, please send a letter describing your project (not to exceed 4 single-spaced pages), two short writing samples (or brief portfolio equivalent for actors), curriculum vitae, and three professional letters of reference to: Dr. Niklaus Steiner, University Center for International Studies, 223 E. Franklin St., CB #5145, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, NC 27599-5145. All material must be received by February 15, 1999. For more information on this Fellowship, visit our Web site (www.unc.edu/depts/ucis).

25th Annual Third World Conference
Silver Anniversary Celebration

"Third World and Global Development: Reconstruction and Redefinition"
March 17–20, 1999 Swissotel Chicago, Illinois USA

"Third World and Global Development: Reconstruction and Redefinition" is the theme of the 25th Annual Third World Conference Silver Anniversary Celebration. The Conference will comprehensively examine the complexity of the Third World and global development since the Bandung Conference in 1955 and explore the perspective of constructive change in preparation for the next millennium. Broad issues in economic, political, cultural, educational, gender, environmental, health, technological and many other social perspectives will be critically examined. The objective of the Conference is to pose original questions, pursue in-depth analyses, and formulate practical solutions to key issues confronting the contemporary global system, especially the Third World and Diaspora societies. In particular, the Conference also seeks to initiate new thinking about the general concept of "Third World" from broad perspectives in a rapidly changing global context.

Keynote Speaker: Professor Amartya Kumar Sen, Master, Trinity College, Cambridge University, will deliver the keynote address. He was the 1998 Nobel Prize Winner in Economic Sciences for his contribution to the better understanding of the economic mechanisms underlying famine. By combining tools from economics and philosophy, Dr. Sen has restored an ethical dimension to the discussion of vital economic problems.

Who will attend: To make the 25th Annual Conference a successful and historic event, broad participation is being sought. Internationally renowned leaders and scholars from throughout the world will address the Conference. All presentations will contribute to a comprehensive volume of works on the Conference theme. Meanwhile, regional conferences will be held in Beijing, Africa and Latin America to further explore the 25th Annual Conference theme as we approach the millenium. The Conference Program Committee cordially invites people from all backgrounds including universities, international organizations, government, NGOs, education, and business to participate in this special event.

Conference Sample Topics to be Covered (but not limited to):

- •Third World Development: Theories, Paradigms and Redefinition
- •Human Resources, Demographics and Immigration
- •Social Transformation: Global and Regional Issues
- •Trade Issues/World Economy and Politics
- •International and Intercultural Perspectives
- •Diaspora Studies: USA, Canada, Europe and Oceania
- •Gender and Macroeconomics
- •Education and Health Care
- •Leadership in the Third World
- •Asia's Economies
- •Environment and Technology
- •Globalization: Description and Critique

Accepted papers are eligible for publication in the Proceedings of the 25th Annual Third World Conference.

••Space for speakers or paper presentations may still be available. Please fax or email your inquiry to the program co-chairs (listed at the bottom of this page).

IDENTITY POLITICS

The University of Virginia English Department will host an interdisciplinary conference called "Is There Life After Identity Politics in America?" Speakers include Eric Lott, Deborah McDowell, Hazel Carby, Susan Gubar, Grace Hale, Walter Benn Michaels, Jose Saldivar, and Robyn Wiegman. Presentations will explore whether there is some model of American culture capable of spiriting us beyond the categories of identity politics, or if categories of race, gender, and ethnicity remain crucial to American attempts to describe personal and collective experience. More detailed information is available at www.engl.virginia.edu/amstud/conference.99/. The conference is free and open to the public. For more information email: <wmm6a@virginia.edu>

RACE IN AMERICA

"Race in 21st Century America: A National Conference" convenes against the backdrop of a complex period of transition, both nationally and globally. This includes rapid population growth among people of color in the U.S., the simultaneous increase of impoverishment and concentrated wealth, and global economic restructuring. These trends are marked by growing efforts to reverse the social, economic, and political gains resulting from the Civil Rights Movement, as well as by increasing debates about the utility of the concept of "race" as a descriptive, analytic, and prescriptive tool. Sponsored by James Madison College and The Black History Committee at Michigan State University, the conference examines existing systems of power and privilege in the U.S., especially as these impact communities of color. We identify specific goals and strategies that promote democratic social, political, and economic structures. Keynote and Roundtable speakers include: Molefi Asante, Temple; Richard Delgado and Evelyn Hu-DeHart, UC–Boulder; Nathan Glazer and William Julius Wilson, Harvard; Manning Marable, Columbia; Dinesh D'Souza, American Enterprise Institute. Attendees must pre-register by mail. Registration information and forms available on the Web at www.jsri.msu/raceconf. For additional questions T: (517) 353-6750; email: <raceconf@jsri.msy.edu>

STOLEN MOMENTS

A brief history of time's little white lies

NEWTON'S UNIVERSE HAS often been likened to divinely designed clockwork by those who wish to hymn its harmonious operation. Unfortunately, it is a clock that keeps pretty lousy time.

Consider the units of time we use today. Some of them are arbitrary. Why does a day have twenty-four hours? That would seem to be a legacy of the twelve signs of the zodiac. Why does a week consist of seven days? Because people used to believe there were seven planets, including the sun and the moon.

But other units of time are not so arbitrary. They depend on (roughly) circular, hence cyclical, motions. A day corresponds to the period it takes for the Earth to complete one rotation on its axis. A month is (more or less) the time the moon requires to circle the Earth. And a year is (again, more or less) the time it takes the Earth to make one revolution around the sun.

Now here is what's vexing: None of these "natural" intervals is a nice, clean multiple of any of the others. One "synodic" month—the time between successive full moons—equals 29 days, 12 hours, 44 minutes, and 2.9 seconds. Twelve such months add up to 354.357 days—well short of a year, which currently equals 365.242199 days.

It gets worse. Why is a year important to us? Because it represents one complete cycle of the seasons, which are crucial for agriculture and transportation, not to mention for knowing when to plan marriages and worship the gods. Annoyingly, though, a complete cycle of the seasons takes about twenty minutes less than one complete revolution of the Earth around the sun. That is because of a wobble in the Earth's axis caused by gravitational tugs from the sun and moon on our planet's less than perfectly spherical shape.

Small wonder, then, that humankind's efforts to come up with a workable calendar should be a millennia-long series of miscalculations and blunders. (Among the many books that have been written on this history, two recent ones are particularly engrossing: "Mapping Time: The Calendar and Its History," by E.G. Richards [Oxford], and "Calendar: Humanity's Epic Struggle to Determine a True and Accurate Year," by David Ewing Duncan [Bard].) Take the archaic Roman calendar. It consisted of twelve synodic months, which meant that it ran eleven days fast against the solar year—a discrepancy that, if uncorrected, would result in a flipping of the summer and winter solstices every sixteen years. The Roman college of priests was only too happy to tamper with it by intercalating extra days or months every so often, when, say, they wanted to keep favored consuls in office longer or manipulate public finances for personal gain.

By the time Julius Caesar came along, the calendar had veered way off the solar year. Following the advice of Egyptian astronomers, Julius fixed things by extending the year an extraordinary eighty days in 46 B.C.—which consequently became known as the ultimus annus confusionis. He also rejiggered the months so that they no longer corresponded to the phases of the moon and added an extra day to the calendar every fourth year to help keep it in sync with the seasons.

Thanks to these improvements, calendrical time came to be taken for granted as an objective, almost God-given thing. But there was still a problem. The Julian calendar consisted of 365.25 days, whereas the solar year was some eleven minutes shorter. Thus, by the sixteenth century the official year was out of whack with the seasons again, by ten days. That might not have seemed so bad for practical purposes, but it was something of a religious scandal, for it meant that Christians were celebrating the resurrection of Jesus on the wrong day. So in 1582 Pope Gregory XIII issued a bull jumping the calendar forward by ten days and canceling leap years at the beginning of centuries not divisible by four hundred. (Thus, 1900 was not a leap year, but 2000 will be.)

As pope, Gregory had, after all, inherited from Caesar the title pontifex maximus, and thus the guardianship of the calendar. Non-Catholics, however, did not see it that way. There were riots in Protestant Germany, where people accused the "Roman Antichrist" of trying to steal ten days of their life. Catholics countered by adducing a nut tree in Gorizia, Italy, that had obeyed the papal reform by blossoming ten days early.

Britain reluctantly adopted the Gregorian calendar 170 years after the papal reform, by which time eleven days had to be skipped; to great popular consternation, the interval from September 3 to 13, 1752, vanished by parliamentary decree. Orthodox Russia resisted until after the Bolsheviks seized power, which is why the October Revolution is today commemorated, if at all, in November.

The Gregorian calendar is remarkably accurate, running only twenty-six seconds faster than the solar year; the error will not amount to a full day until around the fiftieth century, if anyone's still here to notice. Nonetheless, a lively Internet debate continues over what additional improvements ought to be made as we approach the turn of the millennium.

That milestone, of course, is pure social construction. For one thing, base 10 is arbitrary. For another, Jesus—whether or not you consider him your Lord—was born circa 4 B.C. Besides, as pedants everywhere know, the Anno Domini system is off by a year because Dionysius Exiguus, who came up with it in the sixth century, neglected to include the year 0 A.D. And who can blame him? Zero had not yet been invented.
